TEA culture has a history of about fifty years in India, and during that time there has been no serious setback. At present about 380,000 acres are under cultivation, and an aggregate capital of some $75,000,000 is engaged in the enterprise. In Ceylon the industry dates back only fifteen years, but the conditions there have proved so favorable that about 280,000 acres are under tea cultivation, representing a capital of $55,000,000. The coming crop is estimated at 140,000,000 pounds in India and 91,000,000 in Ceylon, giving opportunity for a great expansion in consumption of tea grown in those countries.

AN English writer in a recent issue of Temple Bar says that "when American women reach the age of 40, their faces get dried up, sharp and colorless, and they are apt to become suddenly gray and taciturn." That Englishman's jaw, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, must have been like the jaw bone of the animal which Samson used to slay the lion. He doesn't know American women. Fashionable women in America, as elsewhere, fade early, but they are but a moiety. There is no place upon the globe where women so preserve all the charms of womanhood in age as in America.

HAVE SOME FEARS.

Conservatives Apprehensive of the Rapid Business Flood.

NEW YORK, July 15.—R. G. Dun & Co. in their weekly review of trade, says:

"A business flood so strong and rapid that the conservatives fear it may do harm, is out of season in July. But the seasons this year lap over and crowd each other. May frosts and frights, it is now evident, kept back much business that would naturally have been finished before midsummer, and the delayed culmination of one season gets in the way of efforts to begin another on time. But the volume of business, however, it may be measured, is remarkably large for the month.

"The week has been notable for a sensational fall in wheat of eight cents in two days, followed by recovery of five cents. The sudden drop in prices was the result of speculative rather than commercial influences.

"The latest news indicates an enormous crop of corn, much the largest ever grown if weather favors, but the price is only ⅜c lower than a week ago. Cotton has not changed, though speculation still turns wholly on prospects, regardless of enormous stocks carried over. In Europe the manufacture lags, but here it is satisfactory.

"The weekly output of pig iron was 171,196 tons, having risen 13,970 tons in June and other furnaces have gone into operation since July 4. The rapid rise in prices has brought into operation many additional works, and there is still a rush to buy before prices advance further. Influential manufacturers are sending out warnings that the rise may easily do mischief, and prices have in fact advanced nearly 6 per cent. in two weeks, but are still 15 per cent. lower than in October, 1892.

"Wool is still advancing, with enormous sales. Cotton goods continue active and strong. It is not the season for activity in boots and shoes and orders have fallen off. Prices of shoes, leather and hides are as stiff as ever. Foreign trade is not quite as encouraging, exports for July showing a large decrease.

"The failures for the first four days of July show liabilities of $1,258,500, of which $386,434 were of manufacting and $702,066 of trading concerns. Failures this week have been 253 in the United States, against 247 last year, and 45 in Canada, against 49 last year."

AUGUST SILVER CONFERENCE.

Senator Jones, of Arkansas, Tells Why It Was Called.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Senator Jones, of Arkansas, who joined with Senators Harris and Turpie in issuing a call for a conference of silver democrats in Washington August 18, has written a letter to a friend in Washington explaining the origin of the call and the purposes of the meeting. He says:

"At Memphis, after the adjournment of the meeting there, a number of democrats from different states had a meeting at the Gayoso hotel, and after consideration that meeting requested Senators Harris, Turpie and me to take steps to organize the silver democrats so that they should be fairly represented in the next national convention. We concluded that the best way to do this was to first organize a national central committee of silver democrats, consisting of one or more members for each state, and let these members look after the organization of their own states. To select gentlemen for membership of this committee by correspondence seemed slow; hence it was concluded to invite one or more gentlemen of character and experience from each state to meet in Washington and select, if they thought well of it, this central committee. This is all there is of it as I understand."

The general impression seems to have gone out that this conference was to be a mass-meeting. Senator Jones' statement puts it in a different light.

A MERCILESS MOB.

It Takes the Law Into Its Own Hands in Arkansas.

CAMDEN, Ark., July 16.—About 12 o'clock Saturday night at Hampton, 30 miles east of here, two negroes were mobbed by seventy-five men. Two weeks ago a white man named Martin was killed by three negroes. Two of them were arrested and confined in jail. The mob gathered several nights before, but were persuaded to desist, but it seems that new strength was added when seventy-five men demanded of the sheriff the delivery of the murderers. It was useless to resist such a force with but a handful of men to summon to his aid, so the keys were delivered to them.

The negroes were secured and carried to the neighboring forest. The enraged mob gave them a few minutes for prayer, when the ropes were adjusted, and two spirits were launched into eternity. The men were not masked and made no effort in any way to conceal their identity. All is quiet.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

State Fair.

Extensive improvements have been made to the main exposition hall at the state fair grounds. New underpinning and joists have been put in, the floors have been leveled up and strengthened, and the building has otherwise been placed in the best possible condition. The railroad exhibits will be placed in the north wing at the main entrance. The intention of the managers is to make the exhibit in the main building one of the finest which has ever been seen upon the grounds. Col. Chambers, of the board of managers, has secured an exhibit which will show the process of making binder twine, through all the graduations, from the raw material to the finished product.

The management has decided to reopen entries for the racing program, as the races failed to fill at the original time for closing, June 15. In several of the faster classes there where but three or four entries, and the rules require at last five.

A Queer Case.

The most peculiar case of insanity for many years was developed at St. Paul by the arrest of Johanna Lindberg, a woman 45 years old. The cause of her insanity is excessive coffee drinking, and Johanna is what the doctors call a "coffee drunkard." It was brought out in the examination that for years she has been fond of coffee. The fondness has become gradually greater, until recently she would drink from 30 to 40 cups of coffee a day.

She is said to be very violent, and her husband testified that she had threatened his life a number of times. This, he held, was no idle threat, as she is a large, powerful woman, who in a frenzy of rage could easily overcome his strength. When she was brought into court she was in a seeming stupor. Her hair was disheveled and a part of her clothing had been torn off in the attempt to get away from her captors. She was committed to the insane asylum at Rochester.

Chautauqua.

The third session of the Interstate Summer Assembly of Detroit Lake, has opened and will continue just four weeks.

The purpose of the assembly is to promote the interests of liberal education in science, art, literature and Christian culture. It seeks to elevate ideals, promote Christian fellowship, stimulate to good work in all departments of good citizenship.

The workings and departments of the assembly are conducted on what is popularly known as the Chautauqua plan. The assembly grounds, a heavily-wooded park in the form of a peninsula, with Lake Sallie on one side, Lake Melissa on the other, and the river that connects the two lakes flowing by the end of the park.

Found by Tramps.

Three tramps picked up a box on the Lake Benton road, about three miles of Tyler, containing a live girl baby about 10 days' old and brought in to the village, where it was cared for. The box was nailed up tightly and the men at first supposed it to contain a large snake, but they were finally attracted by the feeble cries of the infant and pride open the lid.

From the condition of the infant it is supposed to lain there all night and scratches on the box indicate that dogs or wolves had attempted to break in. A nursing bottle half full of sour milk laid beside its head. Up to the present its parentage is a mystery.

Close Call.

At Little Falls while Mrs. Jos. Michaud was standing in the doorway of her residence, a bolt of lightning struck the chimney, went down and passed out over the electric light wire. The wire passes over the door where the lady was standing, and the shock threw her down and rendered her unconscious for half an hour. Physicians were called, restoratives applied, and no evil effects are apprehended.

Killed.

Peter Gardner died at the hospital at Duluth from a blow given by Fred Sheland, a neighbor, and the police are looking for the latter with a warrant for murder. Gardner broke a window of his own residence. The act was seen by Sheland, who, in reproving Gardner, struck him on the side of the neck. The blow caused paralysis, and the post mortem revealed the fact that the spinal column was broken. Both Gardner and Sheland are married men.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Drawers that open badly should have the top edges rubbed with a piece of dry blacklead.

—Orange Jelly: The juice of four oranges, the grated rind of one juice and rind of the lemon, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar. Put one-half box of gelatine into cold water, let it stand two hours, and a pint of boiling water and the other ingredients, pour into molds and set on ice to cool.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Boiled Gooseberry Pudding: Make a plain paste by mixing with water half a pound of finely-chopped suet, one pound of flour and a little salt. Line a buttered basin with the paste, fill it with gooseberries, add half a pound of sugar, cover with the paste, tie in a floured cloth, and boil for an hour and a half. Serve with cream.—Leeds Mercury.

—Cherry Meringue: Line a plate with puff paste, prick and bake in a quick oven. While still warm, spread thickly with fresh-stoned cherries. Make a meringue of the whites of four eggs, one-half cupful of sugar and one small cupful of cherries, stirred through last. Heap this on the plate, brown lightly and serve as soon as cool.—Good Housekeeping.

—Soda Crackers: Make with fresh buttermilk a stiff dough with one quart of flour, one tablespoonful of butter, and half a teaspoonful of salt; beat till very light indeed, roll thin, cut accurately into squares, prick with a fork and bake quickly. If shredded rasins are put into the buttermilk the crackers resemble the fruit crackers we find in market.—Ohio Farmer.

—A lemon ice which will make even July seem endurable is made in this way: Squeeze the juice of six lemons into a bowl and steep in it the rind of an orange and of the lemons for an hour. Strain the mixture, add a pint of sugar and then a pint of water. Stir this until the sugar is dissolved. Freeze in the usual way. Before the mixture is quite stiff remove the dasher and pour in a cup of rich cream. Stir rapidly for a few minutes, but do not churn the mixture with the dasher again. When it is frozen it will be found delicious.—N. Y. World.

—Quaking Omelet: Four eggs, half a cup of milk, a rounded tablespoonful of flour and a teaspoonful of salt. Beat together the yolks of the eggs, the flour and salt and add them to milk. Then whip the whites to a stiff froth and stir them into the mixture. Put the salt into the yolks before adding the milk. Put a tablespoonful of butter into a hot frying pan and turn the mixture into it. In about one minute put the pan into the stove and let it remain six minutes. Have a hot platter ready and a sup of cream sauce well seasoned. Turn the omelet on the platter, but do not try to fold it. Pour the sauce around it. Serve at once, as it will fall if let stand.—Chicago Record.

—Red Raspberry Float: One quart of ripe red raspberries; one pint of cream; one cup and a half of powered sugar; whites of six eggs, beaten to a meringue, and slightly sweetened. Press the berries until they are quite dry. To their juice add the powdered sugar, and stir into the pint of cream. Pour this into a glass bowl. Stir lightly into the meringue the squeezed berries, and pour carefully, not to mix, on top of the cream in the bowl. Serve at once. This is, if properly made, not only a delicious but a pretty dish. The pink cream at the bottom of the glass vessel, and above this the white meringue dotted with red fruit, please the æsthetic taste as well as the palate.—Home Queen.

SOILED LAMP SHADES.

Means of Cleaning the Filmy Drape of Chiffon and Silk.

Compressed air is of great assistance in cleaning lamp shades. Owing to the delicacy of the fabrics a dry process should be used, as silk, satin and lace lose their luster when washed, and, besides, the shade maker's touch is more or less lost when the shades are taken apart. Procure an infant's hair brush, which is made of soft bristles set in a bone back. The brush is small, and for that reason and also because of its softness, is best adapted for cleaning silk and satin. Lamp shades which have been used in suburban houses and are merely discolored with dust may be satisfactorily renovated by a careful and gentle scouring or scrubbing with this little brush. To free lace-covered shades from dust apply corn-meal for light ones or Fuller's earth for dark, and remove all loose powder by gentle brushing and tapping, or by means of compressed air if this is available. Fly specks can generally be picked off with the point of a knife.

Shades that are used in the city soon become noticeably soiled and blackened, particularly about the collar, by reason of the soot with which the air is charged. The quickest way to clean a shade that has been thus discolored is to immerse as much of it as possible in gasoline, which should be placed in a clean dishpan, and move it briskly about in the fluid.—Delineator.

Amber Rice Pudding.

Boil one-fourth of a pound of rice until tender in plenty of salted boiling water. Drain and press into well-greased border mold while hot. Let it stand until perfectly cold. Drain a can of peaches from their liquor and press through a sieve, add one teaspoonful of lemon juice and one cupful of cream whipped to a stiff froth. Turn the rice out on a flat dish and pour over it a sirup made from one-fourth of a pound of sugar and one-half of a cupful of water, flavored with lemon juice. Put the peach mixture in the center of the rice border and serve with or without the garnish of candied fruits or nuts.—Table Talk.

Evening waists and bodies, especially those made partially or wholly of chiffon, should be stuffed with soft tissue paper and laid in deep boxes or on freshly-papered closet shelves in preference to being hung up, as they are thereby not only kept fresher, but retain their shape as long as they are worn.—Philadelphia Press.

THE BLUES.

An Easy Way to Dispel a Very Uncomfortable Feeling.

The blues make the person suffering from their presence extremely uncomfortable, and her discomfort in a subtle way acts upon others, so that nobody is quite cheerful in her neighborhood. People who are "blue" are quite often cross as well, and are unable to accept pleasantly the ups and downs of every day. Now, when you think of it, you must admit that it is a very humiliating experience to be cross, for cross people are disagreeable, and none of us wishes to be that.

The best way to get rid of the blues is not to own that they have you. Put on your hat and go for a walk. Call on a friend and take her the piece of music you are to try together, or the book you have just finished, which you would like to lend her. Do something kind for somebody, and stop thinking about yourself. The greatest waste of time in this world, dears, is to think too much about one's self. Mrs. Browning gives the right idea in her poem, "My Kate," where she says:

"'Twas her thinking of others made you think of her."

Don't laugh at me, girls, when I tell you that half the low spirits one hears of springs from a very prosaic source. That pound of chocolates, that rich pudding, that piece of frosted cake, all of them very delicious, but all very indigestible, are to blame, in most instances, for young girl's depression. Try what Emerson called "plain living and high thinking," and see how cheery life will become.—Harper's Round Table.

THE SUMMER PROBLEM.

Where shall we go this summer? where shall we while away
The brief and all too fleeting hour—the sweet vacation day?
In mountain lands or sea shore, on farm or hotel gay?
Where shall we go this summer's the problem of to-day.

Shall we get on an ocean steamer and hie to old Paree?
Or seek out Aunt Amanda 'way up in Schobaree?
Shall we go to the wondrous valley—the grand Yosemitee?
Or take a cot on a sandy lot hard by the sounding sea?

Shall we go to the piny forest and fish for the speckled trout.
And haul in splendid catches that all town friends will doubt?
Shall we go to the rock-bound island on the ocean ten miles out,
Or spend two months in a Teuton town and dine on sauerkraut?

Shall we go to the Lake of Como? shall we seek swell Newport's charms?
Shall we bask in the eye of Nature, or whirl in Dame Fashion's arms?
Shall we put on our linen dusters and go with the dear school-marms
Through the stony Hampshire mountains and the old abandoned farms?

We won't do a single one of these—nay, nay! nay!
—for it seems to me
The very best place in the summer for my wife and children three
Is here in my dear suburban home on the J. J. B. & C.,
Where we know we'll live in comfort and the bathtub's always free.

ACCORDIN' TO HOYLE.

BY A. H. LEWIS.

"YES," said the old cattleman, as he munched a meditative clove, "there ain't much paw and bellow, head-down-an'-tail-up business to a cowboy. Speakin' general an' not allowin' fer them influoences which disturbs none, he's as passive as a fried fish.

"About sixteen years ago, before I abides in Wolfville, I was pesterin' 'round Vegas with Bill Lockridge, who was workin' a small bunch of '7-bar-k' cattle 'way over on the Vermejo. We'd been slashin' 'round the Plaza all day, findin' fault with the whisky an' amoosin' ourselves at our own expense, an' along about five o'clock in the evenin' Bill allows he's some sick of sech revels, an' concloods he'll pint up among the 'dobys explorin' of Oldtown a lot. So we all goes in concert. I wasn't frothin' at the mouth none to go myse'f, not seein' no relaxation pokin' about permiscus among a passel of Mexicans, an' me loathin' of 'em nacheral; but I goes, aimin' to sorter ride herd on Bill, which his dispisition is some free an' various an' liable to mix him into trouble. Not that Bill is bad; none whatever, but bein' seven or eight drinks ahead of that Plaza whisky makes him feel gregar'ous and friendly; an' he's cap'ble of goin' about a-claimin' of acquaintance with people he don't know at all, an' feelin' 'way hostile when the stranger has symptoms of doubt.

"So I goes along; Bill a-warblin' 'The Dyin' Ranger' in several keys.

"The senoras and senoritas a-hearin' of the row would look out an' smile, an' Bill would wave his big hat an' whoop from rapture. If he starts towards 'em, aimin' for a powwow—which he does frequent, bein' a mighty amiable man that away—they gives a squawk immediate an' shets the door. Well, Bill goes on then. Maybe he gives the door a kick or two, informin' 'em of his discontent, but that's all. All at once, while we're prowlin' up one of them spacious alleys a Mexican thinks is a street, we comes up on a I-talian with an organ which he is grindin'. This yere organ ain't so bad an' I've heerd a heap worse strains. As soon as Bill sees him he tries to figger on a dance, but no one'll dance with him.

"'In which event,' says Lockridge, 'I plays a lone hand.'

"So Bill puts up a small dance, like a Navajo, accompanin' of himse'f with whoops. But the dago can't play Bill's music, so the ball comes to a halt.

BILL SHOOTS.

"'Whatever is the matter with this yere tune box, anyhow?' says Bill. 'Gimme the music for a green corn dance, an' don't make no delay.'

"'This yere man can't play no green corn dance,' I says.

"'He can't, can't he?' says Bill, mighty scornful. 'Wait till he tries. I know this man of yore. I meets him two years ago in Druce's, an' me an' him has quite a time.'

"'Whatever is his name then?' I asks.

"'Antonio Marino,' says the dago.

"'Marino,' says Bill, 'that's right. I recalls it because it makes me think fust he's a sheep man, an' I gets quite hostile.'

"'I never see you,' says the dago.

"'Yes, you did,' says Bill. 'You jest think you didn't see me. We has drinks together an' goes an' shoots up the town arm an' arm like brothers.'

"But the I-talian insists he never sees Bill. This makes Bill ugly a lot, an' before I can get to stop it he outs with his six-shooter an' puts a hole into the organ.

"'These yere tunes I hears so far,' says Bill, 'is a heap too frivolous,' an' I figgers this oughter improve 'em.'

"When Bill shoots the I-talian man heaves the strap as holds him to the organ over his head an' flies. Bill ketches the music box, keepin' it from fallin' an' after awhile begins turnin' the crank to try it. It plays all right, only ever' now and then there's a hole into the melody like it had lost a tooth!

"'This yere's good enough for a dog,' says Bill, a-twistin' away on the organ. 'Where's Merino? Whatever is the matter with him? Why didn't he stand his hand?'

"But Merino ain't here no more, as Bill allows it's a shame to let it go that way, an' Mexicans sufferin' for music. So he straps on the tune-box and goes round from one 'doby to another a-turnin' of it loose.

"'How long did this yere Merino turn out his tunes,' says Bill, 'before he collects? However, I makes new rools for the game right yere. I plays these cadences for five minutes and then I gits action on 'em for five. I splits even with these Mexicans, which is shorely fair.'

"So Bill twists away for five minutes an' me a-timin' of him, an' then leans the hewgag up agin' a 'doby an' starts to collectin'. He'd go up to some household a-whirlin' his gun like a pinwheel, and at the mere sight of him the members gets that generous they even attempts to negotiate loans and give 'em to Bill, they're that ambitious to donate.

"One time he runs up on a band of towerists, who was sorter trackin 'round an' lookin' at things, and they comes up an' listens awhile. They was turnin' to go away jest before collectin' time.

"'Hold on,' says Bill, pickin' up his Colt offen the top of the organ. 'I've seed people turn that Jack in church, but you bet you can't jump no game of mine that way. So jest you all line up agin' the wall until I tucks the blankets in on this yere outbreak in F-flat. I'm workin on, an' I'll be with you.'

"So when Bill winds up he goes along the line of them tremblin' towerists an' collects eleven dollars.

"'They was aimin' to git away with all them nocturnes an' peggios, an' arias, an' not say nothin'.' says Bill, 'but they can come no twist like that an' me a ridin' herd. None whatever!'

"Bill carries on this away for three hours; and what on splits an' what on bets he win, he's over a hundred dollars ahead. But at last he's tired, an' allows he'll quit and call it a day. So he lugs the old tom-tom down to Franklin's office. Franklin is marshal, an' Bill turns over the organ an' the money, an' tells Franklin to hunt up Merino an' give him the whole shootin' match.

"'Where is this yere dago?" says Franklin.

"'However do I know?' says Bill. 'Last I sees him he was a-goin' up the calle like a jack rabbit.'

"Just then Merino comes in view feelin' some pensive and fearful about that bullet in his organ; but when he gets Bill's donation his feelin's commences to rise a lot. In fact, he begins to regard it as quite a scheme.

"HOLD ON," SAYS BILL.

"'But you'll have to round up to the alcalde, Bill,' says Franklin, 'I ain't shore none you ain't been breakin' some law.'

"Bill grumbles an' allows Vegas is gettin' a heap too reserved for him.

"'It's gettin' so,' says Bill, 'a free American citizen don't get no encouragement. Here I puts in half a day amassin' wealth for a dago as is sittin' in bad luck; an' elevatin' Mexicans who shorely needs it; an' yere I am layed for by the marshal like a felon.'

"Well, we all goes over to Steele's' Franklin an' Bill and old Steele, the alcalde, goes pokin' about to see whatever crimes Bill's done anyhow. They gits by the capturin' the organ, an shootin' into its bowels; an' standin' up the towerists didn't worry 'em none, but the question of the music itse'f sticks 'em.

"'I'm shorely sorry to say it, Bill,' says Steele, 'but you've been a-bustin' of a ord'nance about playin' music on the streets without no license.'

"'Can't you beat the game no way?' says Bill.

"'I shorely don't see how,' says Steele.

"'Mi tamblen,' says Franklin.

"'Whatever is the matter with tackin' them tunes on ter Merino's license?' says Bill.

"'Can't do it nohow,' says Steele.

"'Well, is this yere ord'nance accordin' to Hoyle an' the declaration of independence?' says Bill. 'I don't stand it none onless.'

"'Shore,' says Steele.

"'Turn your cards, then,' says Bill; 'I'm a law-abidin' citizen an' all I wants is a square deal from the warm deck.'

"So they fines Bill fifty dollars for playin' an organ on the streets without license, and he pays it an' goes away peaceful."—Chicago Times-Herald.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

RUNNING A HARVESTER.

It Calls for Considerable Ingenuity on the Part of the Operator.

Of the various machines and implements used on the farm, there is none so delicate and complicated, or requiring the exercise of more skill and ingenuity on the part of the operator, than the self-binding harvester. The standard machines of to-day have come through and are the result of such a long and thorough course of development and improvement, and manufacturers have followed so closely the same general lines of construction, that one can hardly make a mistake in the selection of a machine so long as he is satisfied to stick to the standards. But the man who allows himself to become too enthusiastic over something "new and novel," and invest in machinery which embodies radical changes in principles of construction, may expect to soon have an out-of-date machine on his hands. While principles may be correct, a course of development and improvement is required before best results are reached in their application.

There are no less than eight binders of different manufacture used within two miles of where I write, all giving satisfaction, so far as I know, and probably each owner could name one or more points in which he considers his machine superior. But I care not how perfect a machine may be, it will never be an unqualified success nor add fresh laurels to its reputation when it is run by a man without sufficient ingenuity and energy to properly hitch to and operate a clod smasher. A great many bad breaks and long delays are the legitimate results of carelessness, pure and simple, and he who makes getting over the ground the one prime object, to the neglect of his machine and the abuse of his team, may expect frequent breakdowns and much bad luck. The saying: "Care makes luck" will apply to running a binder, if to anything. If some little thing gets out of order and the binder begins to "buck," it doesn't pay to get in a splutter and make matters worse by changing things at random. I have learned by experience that the best plan is to keep a cool head and locate the difficulty before remedying it, or even trying to do so. Poor twine is responsible for a deal of fussing in the harvest field. It is nearly impossible to do good, even work with poor, uneven twine. The best twine I ever used was pure manilla; but so much so-called pure manilla is poor manilla, that I would just as soon risk a good, even grade of new, white sisal. As machines become old they usually prefer a little coarser grade of twine than in their younger days. Good reeling is indispensable to square, well-formed bundles, but no ironclad rules can be laid down to govern position of reel for varying kinds and conditions of grain. This can be ascertained only by experimenting until best results are secured. The reel should not run parallel with sickle, but the outer end should stand several inches forward in order to place grain upon platform with butts in advance of heads, as the butts are always retarded by coming in contact with the falling grain. In standing grain, the machine should run about level. It takes but a moment when starting up a grade to tilt the machine forward, and vice versa. It should be so well balanced that the tongue will play on the neck yoke much of the time. Of course this cannot always be done, particularly with the old five-horse stepladder machines, but these are back numbers now, and the new, low, sensible ones do not have so much "swing" in mid-air. It is cheaper and more humane to carry the machine on its wheels than on the horses' necks. It should, therefore, be tilted back when the driver leaves his seat; if it stands long the binder may be shifted back also.—George F. Pettit, in Orange Judd Farmer.

Treating Barbed Wire Wounds.

Barbed wire wounds are difficult to heal. Like a wound caused by the teeth of a saw, the edges being ragged, requires a longer time to heal than a square cut with smooth edges. The swelling likely comes mainly from taking cold in the wound, or the blood may be out of condition. Make a salve of one ounce of calomel and a teacupful of lard. Mix thoroughly and apply twice a day. Tie a loose bandage around the wound to keep out dust and cold. It may be necessary to fasten a string to the bandage and tie around his neck to hold it up. If the salve does not heal the wound he must have a blood purifier.—Rural World.

Protect Fowls Against Heat.

If the fowls must be shut up all summer in a winter house, with more or less glass to the south, it will be cruelty not to give them an opportunity to take shelter from the fierce heat and strong light. The windows should be covered with cotton cloth or protected with a rude awning made of the same cloth, or with evergreen trees cut and set like posts before the windows, or the glass may be whitewashed.

ABOUT HIVE-MAKING.

Investigate Prices and Buy the Best Quality of Goods.

The bee supply business has increased with great rapidity in the past ten years. And the large manufacturing establishments have been a great help to the beekeeping world. Lumber is brought in carload lots direct from the sawmill, and after being seasoned is made up into hives. Every hive is perfect in shape and size, by being sawed and cut by gauges. Probably many think they get poor hives, which is very true, so many people want bee hives cheap. In buying cheap bee hives money is wasted. Buy of a responsible factory and be willing to pay for a good article. Some factories charge more for the same article than others. Investigate the prices and quailty of the goods and buy the best.

Before placing the hive see that it is clean and contains three or four sheets of broad foundation. Place the empty hive on a summer stand, where it is to set when the bees are in it. Be sure the hives are painted, preferably with white. Have the rear end the highest, so no rain will run in the hive. Let the hives front to the east when possible. Place them where the morning sun will shine on them, but the afternoon and noonday heat be shaded off. Do not have too big a front door for weak swarms. Swarms are often caught by fastening an empty hive in a tree, the hive attracting their attention the same as a hole in a hollow limb. We do not recommend this, however, as it seems too much like coaxing neighbors' bees away from home in order to steal them.—James Pearson, in Farm and Home.

POULTRY ON FARMS.

It Yields More Satisfactory Profits Than Any Other Stock.

The farmer has plenty of room on his farm for poultry, and the land so devoted will return as large, if not larger profits than an equal area planted to a crop or used for other stock. Cheap houses can be built to shelter a hundred or more fowls, which will bring in the cash in the winter season by producing eggs, thus largely aiding him to purchase many necessaries while waiting for his crops to grow. There is but little risk of loss in keeping hens if they receive only a part of the attention bestowed on animals, and a very large percentage upon the cost is the certain return that may be realized by a farmer, on a small scale, where the business is conducted properly. There is more profit in raising choice poultry and making a specialty of eggs, considering the cost and outlay, and which can be had annually, than from any other sources, not excepting cows, pigs or sheep, and yet the animals are fed and cared for at an expenditure for labor that would be considered appalling if bestowed on the hens, though the hens pay cash dividends daily for all they receive. Farmers would do well to look into this matter, and now is the time to consider it. Good fowls of any of the improved breeds may now be had at a very reasonable price, and we call the attention of those who have the facilities for keeping fowls of taking advantage of their opportunities.—Prairie Farmer.

AMONG THE POULTRY.

SUNFLOWER seed add luster to the plumage.

OATS are one of the very best feeds for moulting hens.

THE Pekin ducks develop early and are good market fowls.

GEESE thrive on plenty of good pasturage and plenty of water.

TO BE certain of having fresh eggs now, care must be taken to gather them daily.

A POUND of copperas dissolved in two gallons of water makes a good disinfectant.

MIXING scotch snuff or insect powder in the dust bath will help to rid the fowls of lice.

IF ducklings are exposed to wet weather they are apt to take cramps in their legs.

IT is well to remember that as the chickens grow and increase in size they will need room.

THE laying of unusually large eggs denotes that the hens are in an overfat condition.

DO NOT keep too many fowls together. Small hillocks well cared for will give the best results.

IF you have a number of good old hens, do not change them for pullets. Keep some of the old hens.

BETTER not hatch out any more chickens until September. They will not thrive in the hot weather.

THE roosts should be low, especially for large, heavy fowls, and should all be of the same height.—St. Louis Republic.

IMPROVED HEN'S NEST.

Its Inventor Calls It the Very Best Thing Yet Discovered.

The accompanying illustration shows the very best way to set a hen that has yet been discovered, so far at least as the writer is concerned. The nest is made in a roomy box, with a cover. Nailed to one side of the box is a little slat yard—slats on top also—in which water and food are kept constantly. The hen can go out into the yard at any time, eat and drink, and has no temptation to wander away and let her eggs get cold. Where several hens are sitting, a contrivance like this for each saves all bother of looking after them, to see that two do not get on one nest, etc. You put food and water in the dishes—the hen "does the rest!"—Orange Judd Farmer.

Anthrax in Human Beings.

Some extraordinary statements as to the ravages of anthrax and the attitude of the board of agriculture in relation thereto were made at a recent meeting of the Leicestershire county council, England. The disease broke out on the farm of a Mr. Warren, at Arnesby, and not only the cattle, but human beings and all kinds of animals were attacked. The farmer and sixteen men were all ill at one time, one man dying in the Leicester infirmary. A woman in passing the plague-stricken spot was stung by a fly, and died from anthrax. Cats, dogs and birds in the neighborhood also died.

FREE FIGHTS IN COREA.

Fierce Encounters Between Contending Guilds.

Remarkable features of the social life of the capital, Cho-sen, are the various guilds and their great stone and stick fights. Neighboring towns and villages who are jealous of each other also settle their differences by a stone fight in the first moon, such period being universally set aside for fights, both public and private. Children are encouraged to fight by their parents, who hope to make them hardy and courageous—sides are made up and they fight till they are exhausted. The butchers and the mud plasterers had a fierce feud, and it was decided to settle it by a pitched battle on a plain outside the south gate. On the day appointed some eighteen hundred men went down to fight, a stream dividing the two camps.

The battle began with volleys of stones as the belligerents neared each other, and when one party forced its way over the stream and all came to close quarters the fighting was carried on with clubs and knives. It was a drawn battle, so the leaders decided, and was renewed a few days later, victory eventually resting with the plasterers. Very few were killed, says Mr. Landor, though none escaped without a wound; but the whole affair sounds like one of Lucian's grotesque battles. The court patronizes these extraordinary duels, and the king is kept informed of the results. The police, of course, take care that the by-standers do not come in for any hard knocks. After the fighting moon has waned, life in "the Land of the Morning Calm" sinks back into the usual stagnation.—London Spectator.

THROAT PARALYSIS.

(From the Courier-Herald, Saginaw, Mich.)

It was publicly talked all over Clare County, Mich., for some time before the Courier-Herald sent a reporter to Dover to fully investigate the Coulter matter. He finally went, and we publish to-day his full report. The Coulters are prominent people, though Mrs. C. in response to the question whether she objected to being interviewed, said: "Certainly not." Her story follows:

"About 14 years ago we decided to take up our abode in Dover and everything went along smoothly for several years, business progressed and being of a saving temperament we accumulated quite an amount. Our family increased as the years rolled by and we now have 5 children living, the oldest 15, youngest 3, but sickness made its way into our household, and doctors' bills flooded upon us, until we have nothing left but our home, and these sweet children. Everything else went to satisfy the claims of physicians.

"About 3 years ago I had a miserable feeling at the back of my ears, my right hand became paralyzed and the paralysis extended to my arm and throat, and would affect my head and eyes, sometimes for days I would lose my sight, my face was deformed, lifeless, as it were, my nose was drawn to one side and I presented a pitiable apperance and never expecting to regain my natural facial expressions. I employed the best physicians that could be procured, expending thousands of dollars for their services but could not obtain relief. At last, they stated my case was beyond the reach of medical skill, and it would be but a short time until the end would come. This certainly was not very encouraging to me, but I never gave up hope. In connection with receiving the attendance of physicians I have tried every medicine known to the apothecary but never received any relief until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People came to my assistance. Before I had taken half of the first box the deformity in my face had left me, and before four boxes had been consumed the paralysis had disappeared entirely and much to my surprise I felt like a new woman. I have not taken any medicine since last spring, just about a year ago and my trouble has not appeared since. I owe my health, my life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"A short time since my little boy John was afflicted with St. Vitus' dance. He could not walk across the room without assistance, in fact he would fall all over himself, but after taking a few boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, St. Vitus' dance entirely left him, and no trace of the affliction is left. These pills are worth their weight in gold. You may say in this connection that I am willing at any time to make affidavit to the truth of these statements, and furthermore I will answer any communication concerning my case, as I consider it nothing more than right and just that I should assist suffering humanity."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

The Sweet Girl Graduate's Excuse.

She was the prettiest young thing you ever looked at, and she will be one of the sweet girl graduates of '95. The minister was asking her about her studies:

"Have you read Cæsar?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, indeed. We read Cæsar the first year."

"Ah, indeed! And have you read Cicero?"

"Oh, yes! We read Cicero the second year."

"Ah, indeed! And have you read Virgil's 'Aeneid?'"

"Yes, I've read everything."

"Ah, indeed!"

But she had the sweetest smile and a complexion like a peach.—Philadelphia Press.

"This is about the time of the year," said Mrs. Watts to her neighbor, "that the fishing fever strikes my husband. If he can get out on the banks of some creek and catch two or three little mudcats in the course of an afternoon he is perfectly happy."

"So he is fond of fishing, then?"

"Fond of fishing? Why, that man is a perfect anglomaniac."—Texas Siftings.

MINER'S SUPERSTITIONS.

One of Them Has to Do With Strikes Discovered on a Friday.

Superititions of miners are among the curiosities of mental phenomena which are past finding out, as witness a scrap of conversation in Creede camp one evening recently:

"Hallo, Dave! That strike at the 'Dug Out' is a big thing. Just bin up there."

"No good, Charley. It hoodoed itself," was the reply.

"In what style?"

"It were a Friday job. Pay dirt on Friday are a devil's gift."

"Onless there's a heap of it. Then it'll do."

"The more there is, the worse for the finders," objected Dave. "It cusses 'em all the more. Over on Crip [the short name for Cripple creek] a fat streak was struck in the Davis mine one Friday morning. None of the boys thought what day it was, they were so tickled, but after doing a little work to find out if it was the real cream, they all got blind drunk and kept tanked up full for a week. Just a week, and it was Friday when they got back to work, you see."

"Had anybody stolen the mine?"

"Not yet. It were all there, and as they went further in it got better'n better. In ten weeks they took off forty-six wagon loads to the mills, and it gin 'em back silver worth ninety-five thousand dollars. The owners 'lowed they could take it to Denver better'n to send it by express, and they hired a car over to the Springs and had the pure stuff loaded in. Then they stayed there till two in the morning to guard it. Jest then along came a lot of 'agents' with mules and carts and carried off about half the bars, and left the three fellers tied and gagged, locked in the car."

"You don't say that 'agents' carried off a ton 'n a half of silver?"

"Certain and sure. You see, part of 'em was galoots from the mill and knew all about how things was fixed, and I heern part was from the sheriff's office to keep order and see there was a fair divide. Most anybody could be a agent in them times."

"Well?"

"Yes, and that hold-up was a Friday morning. They got to Denver with the other half of the stuff, got a receipt for it and sold her at a big shave. I reckon they got pretty nigh $30,000, but it didn't do 'em no good. They had worked hard and kep' sober a good while, and wanted a little blow-out. They started in by getting too drunk for any use, and that made 'em too rich for any sense, so they began to speckelate in the faro and monte business, and in two weeks they were cleaned out. One sobered up afore the others, and he had about one hundred dollars left, and they got back to the 'Davis' one Friday night looking like three old bums."

"But there was good stuff left there yet."

"Oh, plenty. It were good for big money, but the boys was in debt considerable, and so they had to mortgage her. Some fellow there was always looking for a chance like that. They paid their little debts and worked hard for a week. Then they had a fight among theirselves, and two knocked off work and got drunk. T'other stuck to biz a few days and then he got drunk. Pretty soon things got so bad nobody'd trust 'em, and when the mortgage come due the Davis was sold meas'ly cheap. Some spec'lators got her, and they took out pretty nigh onto six million dollars before she gin out."

"Well, I don't want no Friday in mine."

"Nor I too."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Why Women Wear Earrings.

According to an old Spanish history of the conquest of New Grenada, the wearing of ear and nose jewels was a privilege of rank among the natives. This was generally the case among all savage tribes, and its prevalence is the scientific reason for the atavism which leads American women to pierce their ears for rings long after they have abandoned the practice of sticking a pin through their noses to indicate their high standing in society.

WE should quietly hear both sides.—Goethe.

You can carry the little vial of Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets right in the vest-pocket of your dress suit, and it will not make even a little lump. The "Pellets" are so small that 42 to 44 of them go in a vial scarcely more than an inch long, and as big round as a lead pencil.

They cure constipation.

One "Pellet" is a laxative; two a mild cathartic. One taken after dinner will stimulate digestive action and palliate the effects of over-eating. They act with gentle efficiency on stomach, liver and bowels. They don't do the work themselves. They simply stimulate the natural action of the organs themselves.

DELANO DIARY

—Prof. Probst is among those who now tread upon cement side-walks.

—The Delano Crickets met the Delano Cyclones on Saturday. Score 16 to 4 in favor of the Crickets.

—The creamery does better since the last rain. Nothing better than a good shower, even for butter business.

—An Epworth League social was held at Leon Frazee's last Saturday evening. Those present say they had a fine time.

—The road to the creamery has been repaired; the yawning abyss on Third Street has been partially fixed; and a fine artificial stone sidewalk laid along uear by.

—The Village Council held a regular meetiug on Monday evening. From an eye witness who attended expecting to see the show we learn that all passed off quietly.

—John E. Borsch purchased the goods of the late firm of Hanseman and Kohler, his bid being a cent on the dollar above the next lowest. He got them for 42cts on the dollar.

—Quite a number of traveling men, out of a job, spent Sunday at Delano. Many of them were well dressed and presented a fair appearance, but people didn't like to feed them gratis.

--Mercantile business seems on the revive. Mr. Meister has opened up a store in thd Roehl building, and a Mr. Snyder from Lake Minnetonka is said to be going into the Charley Eppel Store.

—Considerable poultry continues to find its way to the Lakes and Cities from this neighborhood. Farmers in this vicinity are blessed with the best market iu the state for all kinds of products of their farms

—Messrs Vorse and Erickson have served their time on the Board of Education and on Saturday evening beginning at 7 o'clock an election will be held to elect two new members for 3 years. Come early and help at the preliminaries.

—J. B. Plattner let his driving horse out for a run, and some grass, in Joe Cramer's pasture a few days ago. He took the run first: the wire fence got in his way; Dr. Walters stiched up his breast and Johnny has been applying "Cactus Oil " since. "Similia Similibus Curantur".

—A couple of car loads of Indians passed through town Wednesday on their way to Winnepeg. Many ot our citizens were regaled with the first sight of the noble red man. Many others were led to recall the scenes of other days when the savage wrs more numerous than the pale face in these regions. They were said to be "Crees". Several ran over to the watering trough and filled littled tin pails with water, much to the amusement of the young folks. They were dressed like base-ballists or oarsmen; are probably sports ot some kind.

—Delano and vicinity is visited this fine weather by many City people. It is the first town with city conveniences west of Minneapolis; on the G. N. R. R. It is the first large village. It is a convenient distance for bicyclists to travel, being about 30 miles from Minneapolis, and among the trips written up by the enterprising Minneapolis Times for its readers to enjoy an outing, Delano is found. The road is as good in this direction as in almost any ether for the same distance; and people are learning these things by driving and riding out to see us occasionally. Especially Monday morning trains bear away many people who haye enjoyed a splendid visit to the country for a few hours or days.

—Numbers of sheep and lambs haye been driven from this vicinity to City markets, lately.

—Read the notice "Build a Church" and contribute your mite toward the work of building a nice house in place of the one lately burned.

—Street Commissioner Joseph Brenner, Will Eppel, Valentine Eppel Jr. two Leudashers, and others started for the Dakota harvest field Wednesday. They went by team.

—Pastures, so nearly dried up that animals were breaking the fences in search of better feed, have taken a greener appearance and horses and cows are more contented since Sunday's rain —On Sunday morning the rain began to come down in a fine shower, and we were treated to a good soaking rain. Farmers and others feel happy that the crops and gardens are once more in a fair way to be good.

—Quite a number of men bound for the west, found the shade in the park on R. R. Ave. more conducive to comfort than the scorching rays of Old Sol, in the dusty highways and turned in and took a snooze on the grass, Wednesday.

--Some live foundryman might, by arranging with C. J. Buckley for the manufacture of presses; and with Joe Cramer for the turning out of castings for his new device for fence posts, afford to locate shops here, which could, by doing ordinary repairing in their line accommodate a good many machine men, and at the same time derive a good living and something over.

—The Delano Board of Education announce to the public; this is no private business' that: "The Poals will be kept open for one hour," at the election to take place tomorrow evening. Let every voter in the distric get to the polls and vote his choice before the hour is up, from 7 to 8 P. M. Saturday July 20.

—Harry Young's new pony took French leave of its owner unceremoniously leaving the barn one night lately. For several days his whereabouts was a mystery: he was fiually located in a pasture with grass up to his eyes out in the Polish neighborhood. Harry and his father after a fruitless chase left him their claiming that ten men couldn't chase him out of the pasture, let alone catch him. Mr. Hamilton of Rockford and his son next went after him and we see the pony is at home again.

—Hearing the hum of machinery in the back room of the Delano Furniture Company's place of buisness, Wednesday, we were lead to investigate and soon found ex-councilman Coffin riding as hard as he could go, on what seemed to be a stationery bicycle. We asked if he thonght he wonld soon be able to make her go, when he brought around a window sash and we found he was manufacturiug screen doors and windows with the novel invention so much resembling the fashionable means of locomotion.

—Some of the towns throughout the State have been discussing the advisability of making an ordinance obliging the village treasurer to pay half, for the building of new side-walks of stone or cement. We understand it was talked of here. But now that one such sidewalk has been built it is hardly likely to become a law. If the council would build some sidewalks for people who are too poor to build there own it would look better than paying for half of a fancy one for some fellow who is able to build his owu.

—Dont fail to attend the school meeting on Saturday evening. from 7 to 8 P. M. You are as much interested in having good schools in town as is the average voter. You should come and vote for thebest men for officers to look after the hiring of teachers, and the other duties of school officers. Don't stay away and then complain that the wrong men were elected. that the $10,000 debt on the school house is not lessened; that the school is not properly run; that we should have a better grade, etc, etc. Be on hand promptly, and do your duty as an American citizen and help elect the best board in town.

—On Wednesday night, near midnight, one of the severest electric and rain storms of the season set in. People were awakend from their slumbers by an unusally loud report of thunder, and everybody felt that sometning not far away must have been struck. Thursday morning it was learned that a Box Elder tree in the row outside of the fence in front of H. C. Parslow's residence had recelved the electricity. The tree was split and broken off and thrown into the street. One window sash was knocded down and a pane of glass in another window on the porch was broken. in the home of Mr, Parslow. The rain was a soaker and kept np all night and far into the next day.

—Delano is right to the front for inventive genius. Some years ago the the late Jacob Kurtz received a patent on a device for unhitching horses from the wagon in case of a run away. Frank Hopper had a car coupler, made by his father, on exhibition here for some time years back. But lately things have taken more tangible shape and C. J. Buckley has patented a printing press that seems to be in great demand; he having manufactured and sold several. And now Joseph Cramer, whom people were not suspecting of having such ideas of becoming wealthy has received a patent for a fence post, that bids fair to revolutionize that business. The patent is for an iron to be driven in the ground, on the top is a socket into which fits a two by four scantling post, onto which can be strung wire or boards.

--Report says John Brandser will soon be a Delanoite once more. Welcome back John.

--Olaf Peterson, J. F. Soderstrom, of Smith Lake, and Mr. Graaf, of Minneapolis are bound Delano shall not want for a shoe store.

--In our "List of Patents Granted" appears this week, first one on the list, the name of a well known Delanoite. It Don't look bad either.

—Dar Welker received a severe bruise on the face and nose, Saturday, while handling horses. Mr. Smith's horse from Long Lake struck him with his front foot. Dar is convalecing.

—Why didn't the School Board, as has been the custom, print the report the same week of the school meeting instead of the week after. Look over what advance statements the Eagle has given and see what you think of tne financiering that twelve years, after uhdertaking to build a $6,500.00 school house, haye on hand a debt of $12,800.00.

—The Stereoptican Lecture, by Rev. R. R. Atchison, at the City Hall, last night was fine. The weather was rather damp and kept a good many away, but those present enjoyed the instructive lecture and the excellent views. The speaker pointed out the fact that several noted battles begining with Bull Run were fonght on Sundays and that the attacking party, on whichever side was repulsed, on every one of them.

—The Eagle insists that people like beer better than 4th of July orations and says of the latter "Nobody reads what is said on the fourth any more than they listen to it." Poor Old Bird! She surely represents no body in this American land when she gets that off except her double headed self. Constructed as she is with a head reared as a follower of Gessler and another as a genuine short horned Johnny Bull what more could be expected of her? There are many people who are fond of both beer and 4th of July orations; some who prefere the oration; but there surely can be but the one Old Bird in such a predicament as she represents her self to be.

—W. J. McLeod, of Redwood Falls, was in town Wednesday, and made the GAZETTE a brief but pleasant visit. Mr. McLeod was looking over some of the scenes of his early life. He will be remembered as the "Willie" who brought the doctors to the Divine farm at the time of that terrible explosion of Pete Borks threshing engine. He first came to Delano on horse back, found the doctors gone to Rockford to the County Fair; though but a small boy, hero like, he pursued his journey to that place and quickley had medical aid on the road to assist the wounded. Five people lost their lives from the explosion amoug them Dr. S. D. Grant. who had a farm near the accident.

—The Old bird, up street that flopped and floundered about and induced so many of our respectable citizens to invest in a scheme, where they could take shares, paying in 60cts to a man who retained 10cts, and loaned them money from the general fund, the interest on which they should pay monthly, at a cheaper rate than they could get elsewhere, the investors to receive 24 per cent on their money, is now, after in the neighborhood of seven years floundering and fluttering about and telling about the improbability of the stocks ever maturing. Of course posted people expect such schemes to profit by the lapse of stockholders. Wonder if the Old Bird still retains stock as some say she did in the newspaper business when she got her start.

—The annual school meeting will be held in the city hall at 8 o'clock next Saturday evening. It is scarcely likely that the attendance will be as large as last year as there does not appear to be any contest on hand. The annual report of the treasurer will be found in the next issue and will show receipts and expenditures for the past year.—Eagle.

The Old Bird is off again. The law requires the polls to close at that time, after having been kept open for one hour. If you come at eight of course the little cotorie will have desposed of their business for the year with a verification oy the statement that "It is scarcely likely that the attendance will be as large as last year as there does not appear to be any contest on hand". How could there be with only the specially gathered audience doing the business while people waited for the hour to come? Though the School Board holds secret sessions, and don't advertise in the GAZETTE, even when such a misleading statement as the above has been given to the voters of the district there is noting small about us and for the benefit of our readers we would advise them if they wish to take part in the most important part of the school meeting to be at the school house before 7 o'clock to-morrow night Saturday July 20.

County Cullings.

The Buffalo Jonrnal says Prof. Hawker made the 4th of July address at Delano. Our readers know better than that, as do the large crowd of people who were present that day. Prof. Willis E. YOUR FUTURE

IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

NEW EVERY MORNING.

Every day is a fresh beginning;
Every morn is a world made knew.
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you.

All the past things are past and over.
The tasks are done, and the tears are shed.
Yesterdays errors, let yesterday cover:
Yesterday's wounds which smarted and bled,
Are healed with the healing which night has shed.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly:
Here is the spent earth all reborn:
Here are the tired limbs springing lightly
To face the sun and to share with the morn
In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Listen my soul, to the glad refrain,
And spite of old sorrow and older sinning,
And puzzles forecasted an possible pain,
Take heart with the day and begin again!

—Susan Coolidge.

HORRABLE, but not as able in debate as Harvey, on the financial question.

A. Y. EATON, of Buffalo, is liable to be the goldbugs candidate for Congressman from the Sixth District next time. Of course he had to yield to them Towne folks last time; but now he claims to be in tune with his party on finances.

As we predicted last week, in case Mr. Horr failed to thoroughly demolish Mr. Harvey's arguments, some thing would be done to counteract the effect on readers. The gold bugs have already begun their howl that the debate don't amount to any thing anyway. We predict again, this time that the gold bugs will not use the book given out by the contestants stenographer as a campaign document, to any great extent.

Economy Again.

WOODLAND, July 24.

MR. EDITOR:—I thought after reading your reply to my questions that the first question was not clear; that is you did not see my meaning. I will state it this way: Why is it necessary for farmers to economize; and what would be the general result of such economy?

The newspapees are now making great ado over the coming crop prospect. They are full of the encouraging prediction that business of all kinds will soon be revived; that the good crop will bring this revival in business. Now if the farmer had been in circumstances to keep the returns from his crop and hoard it would it help business in general? He will pay off some of his debt with it I suppose and that will help local business to some extent. But let him economize after this; let him buy nothing but the necessities; let him learn to live on a lower and cheaper plan and what will be the result on the other business or industries of the country? There will be need for fewer manufacturing establishments more will be thrown out of work, charitable and penal institutions will increase, more officers will be required there will be more looking for office and a vast increase in corrupt politicians. Taxes will steadily increase as they have been increasing with the hard times, hence I can not see the great good that will result from economy under the present conditions. As I said before we must and do economize.

The good times of which you speak when money was plenty were the times when people were spending and circulating money freely. We never knew anyone that got rich by economy. A person may get enough to make himself comfortable and independent but not rich. The men that are piling up the colosal fortunes do not economize. M. G. Mulhall the eminent statistician gives figures showing the productive power of the leading nations of the world as follows:

Foot tons per inhabitant per day.

|---|---|
| United States | 1940 |
| Great Britain | 1470 |
| Germany | 900 |
| France | 910 |
| Italy | 330 |

Mulhall takes wheat as the comparative value of farm products with the following results:

Grain produced by one farm hand.

|---|---|
| United States | 475 |
| Great Britain | 228 |
| France | 188 |
| Germany | 188 |
| Italy | 115 |
| Australia | 97 |

Here are statistics that will overthrow the arguments advanced by the protectionists, that the U. S. has the best paid labor of the world. According to this the U. S. has the poorest paid labor. $7. per month for a farm hand in Great Britain is about as much as $15. per month in the United States. $7. per month is higher wages in France or Germany than $15. in the U. S. $4. per month in Italy is as high or a little higher wages than $15. per month in the U. S.

Why should there be want with such productive power? What absorbs all this wealth? There is power enough in the great nations to produce all that can be used; giving every person the necessaries of life and many luxuries. It seems plain to me that our distribution is simply vicious. No economy, no rule will help the industrial masses while wealth is drawn from the people to enrich a few individuals. There must be a radical change in our finance and commerce before there will be a return to good times. We seem to have education enough or at least it costs the people enough. But we need more thinkers:

"For thus it is on every soil
Those who think must govern those who toil.
And all that Freedom's highest aims can reach
Is but to lay proportioned loads on each;
For should one order unproportioned grow,
Its double weight will ruin all below."

M. E. BENNETT.

John McCary Again.

Mr. Editor, must confess, that after the elapse of half a century I have become more or less superstitious in regard to that nnmeral 13, yet I am no believer in spooks, ghosts nor hobgoblins, and have no consciencious scruples against the dollar of our dady's, nor against 16 to 1. But what has become of the 13 colonies and the free institutions they fought to establish more than a century ago, and that emblem of liberty originally composed of 13 stars and 13 bars, now floats over a cotinent extending from ocean to ocean, which is far superior in soil, climate, resources and natural advantages to any other country on God's earth and yet the land is filled with alms housed tramps, and people destitute and on the verge of starvation. Can someone of a giant mind who is well versed in the history of the past and is able to grasp future prophesy, solve this problem for me. That great magna charta, the constitution of the United States, that guarantees to us a soverign power vested in the rights of the people has been shorn of its strength, and our liberties have become traffic and trade. One and two years ago the issue before the people was tariff, tariff, until it become as tedious as a twice told tale, lost its strength and vanished away like the midnight ghost, yet McKinley and some of his friends would like to reserrect the tarriff question and make it an issue 96 but this can not be done, and past blessings must suffice amidst turmoil and strife another great question has arisen which is of vital importance to the people of this country. That is the money question, ever since the days of the rebellion the financial question of this country has been of grave importance and yet the money lords of England, the bankers of Wall street, and money kings, monopolists, etc., have like leeches been sucking the very life of the nation, and we cry out in our distress, "O Lord how long are these things to continue." I believe that our national state, and municipal bonds will never be paid until the judgement cancels the debt. I fear many people have no conception of our financial condition but to many our situation is alarming, it is no scarecrow either put up to frighten away the midnight prowler but are stuborn facts live issues before the people and ones they should well consider. "When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice, but when the wicked rule the people mourn."

Many are the advocates for a single gold standard, and it seems strange too, for what the bankers of Wall street and England want it should be plaine to the common people of this country that they do not want it, for what is meat to them is poison to the poor man, while the moneyed class is after wealth and emoluments, the poor man is only trying to obtain a living and hew out for himself and family a home. Tradition has taught us that men to long in office is not good for the body politic, they become corrupt, defile the Courts and Legislation, and do not work for the best interest of the masses.

Mr. Editor, my brain may be somewhat confused on these matters, and I may be unorthodox and preaching heresy, but if I see it in the true light then we should be alarmed at our condition. I think the people are getting tired of reading or listening to the opinion of every little whiffet or cross road politician on the money qestion, many of them know about as much about what our country most needs, as the donkey knows about a legal holiday.

In 1850 Congress gave the first land grant to railroad corporations, and it has been going on ever since until they have given away millions upon millions of our public domain without the consent of the people. The Union Pacific railroad and its branches has cost this government many millions of dollars in land grants and subsidy bonds, and yet England holds the first morgage on the roads. Should every man of this country understand how the Union Pacific R. R. was worked through Congress by our own Congressman, Oak Ames, and the credit mobilier, they would ask for the shot gun policy to be reinstated. It would take a book half as large as the five books of Moses to explain it all. And further do not allow yourselves to beleive that this is the only thing that has been done in a corner, during the last thirty years, all this has been done for the aggrandizement of the few, and when you see the money kings trying to get a certain thing established you may know it is for self interest and not for the interest of the masses. But I must cut my thread of argument and the perpexing question to millions that are interesting.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 19, 1895.

When an individual attempts to break down another individual's credit by misrepresenting his business affairs the libeled individual can appeal to the courts and by proving the libel have the libeler punished. But the United States government has no such redress. When an apparently concerted attempt to injure the credit of the government and bring on another financial panic, such as is now being made by those republican newspapers which are printing sensational, and in many instances entirely false, accounts of the government's financial affairs, the government can only appeal to the common sense and fairness of the people. There is nothing either alarming or unexpected in the present condition of the governments finances. As was expected the expenditures during the first half of July were largely in excess of the receipts. The reason is obvious. Of the $29,000,000 which have been paid out this month $11,000,000 has gone to pay pensions, about $7,000,000 to pay interest on bonds, including those of the Pacific railroads, and more than $6,000,000 has been paid out under the appropriations made by the last Congress, which became available on the first of July. Some republican papers, in their anxiety to bring on another financial panic, or at least stop the revival of business now sweeping over the country, have gone so far as to say that the revenues of the government were falling off. Partisanship is no excuse for such a willful misstatement as that. On the contray, the revenues are increasing, those for the first half of July being much larger than the receipts for the same period last year. The U. S Treasury is all right, and likely to remain so as long as it is in charge of democrats.

Secretary Smith has gone to Georgia to make some financial speeches, in which he will tell his hearers why he lost faith in the efficacy of the free coinage of silver and became an advocate of sound money. He has accepted invitations to deliver three speeches, but, as his mail was for some days before his departure from Washington filled with invitations to deliver speeches in other parts of the State, it is probable that he will make more than that while he is about it.

Secretary Lamont very seldom consents to being interviewed for publication—he is an old newspaper man, which accounts for his shunning notoriety—but he made an exception in order to deny the silly story about his western trip having been in the interest of a third term for President Cleveland. He said: "I was not hunting ghosts, though I am told some were about. My trip was purely a business one, and I had neither inclination nor opportunity to meddle in politics. About the only people I saw and talked with were the military and the railroad people. The railroad men whom I met told me that the outlook was very favorable for great prosperity. They are about the only ones I had an opportunity to talk with on the subject, and I presume that they are about the best judges."

By the way, speaking of this third term business, which some republican editors seem disposed to make a standing nightmare out of, there is nothing in it. While an occasional democrat of prominence has expressed a willingness to support President Cleveland for a third term, no personal friend of his has ever encouraged such an idea, and it can be stated on excellent authority that he has never made a suggestion to any member of his cabinet that could be construed, even in the most indirect manner, to mean that he desired another nomination. A gentleman who is known to enjoy the President's confidence said on this subject: "It is to silly to be seriously discussed. I am satisfied that Mr. Cleveland would long ago have said that he would under no circumstances accept another nomination had he not thought it to be entirely unnecessary to do so. You may depend upon it that he will stop it quick enough should it at any time between this and the holding of the democratic National convention become evident that a serious attempt was being made to nominate him again. He is proud as he has a right to be, of the three nominations given him by the democratic party, but if he has any ambition for a fourth nomination his closest associates have never discovered the slightest evidence of it. You cannot find a single man whose relations with him are close who believes that he would allow his name to go before another national convention."

How to Live Long.

Dr. Burgrave, of Ghent, who has passed his hundredth year, has written a book on longevity. The only way to live long, he says is for each person to live according to his proper individuality; to select what is good for ones self, and to avoid all else. In other words, one must live as nearly as possible in harmony with his surroundings, the contented mind, the happy heart, these things prolong life more than dieting and regular hours of sleep. —Globe.

What is a Legal Paper.

Attv. Gen. Childs has been asked by S. A. Clewell, of the Stillwater Gazette, to give an opinion as to what constitutes a legal daily paper under the law passed by the late legislature. This law makes certain provisions as to what shall constitute legal papers and provides for their publication at regular intervals, according to whether they are daily, weekly, monthly or what not. There has been a fight in Stillwater over the city printing between Mrs. Seward, publisher of the Messenger, and the publishers of the Gazette. It appears that the Gazette has won the fight, and now Mrs. Seward is preparing to contest its claim to being a legal daily newspaper on the ground that they did not publish on Christmas and the Fourth of July.—The Minneapolis Journal.

Supervisor's Powers.

From the Litchfield Independent we clip the following item of interest to some of our readers;

"A recent decision by Judge Brown on the question of the power of boards of supervision to contract debts without authority of the legal voters of a town, was made on a case arising wherein the supervisors purchased a road grader for $175, giving town orders therefore. Objection being made to the purchase, and also by the new board of supervisors to the payment of the orders, the town was sued and the court was called to pass upon the question of authority. The case is of interest in this as well as in other communities, where there has been more or less trouble in towns through the action of supervisors. who have in an individual capacity contracted for and purchased machinery and supplies without due authority.

The following is the courts interpretation of ths law, and by it he finds, that the purchase not being authorized by the legal voters, was void. The court says:

'Under our system of township organization, the principal business of an organized town is transacted by the legal voters at the annual town meetings. The powers of such towns are expressed defined and limited by statutes, as are also the powers of the board of supervisors. Conceding, for the purpose of the case, that an organized town may, without further legislative authority than is contained in the general statutes purchase an implement or article of property like that claimed to have been sold the defendant in this case, such purchase can only be made by authority of the legal voters given at an annual or special town meeting. The statutes will be searched in vain for any such authority in the board of supervisors.

The purchase of the "road grader" in question not having been made by, or with the authority of the legal voters, and no money having been voted or raised therefore, the action of the board of supervisors in making the purchase, was unauthorized and void; and it is immaterial whether there was not at the time of the purchase, any money in the town treasury applicable to general town purposes or to the road and bridge purposes.'—Morris Sun."

Letter From Minnesota.

BY JOSHUA WILLIAMS
In the Newville, Pa. Times.

"MR. EDITOR:—"I have somewhat to say unto thee," more as the representative of your costituency, than personally. I write from "Vagabondia Cottage" Orono township, Lake Minnetonka, where with my family, occasioned by needs of broken health inhividually, I am spending the summer. We are sixteen miles from Minneapolis, in a direct line, nearer nineteen as the road runs. The attractions of the place are beyond description, will attempt none, witnessing fills one with prolonged delightful wonder. The kaleidescopic changes of light, shadows and coloring, reflected from the clear, pure waters of the lake, furnish a veritable panorama of surpassing beauty and unimaginable variety. To heap the measure, we'll throw in the atmosphere—which for invigorating health giving effect, is "hard to beat".

My own connection with these parts date back to 1856, when they were portions of the "Big Woods a heavily timbered region, some fifty miles one way by two hundred the other, and since the injunction "Woodman spare that tree has been disobeyed in regard to its constituent parts. is found to have exerted controlliny influences upon both climate and supply of moistness and water."

The writer then gives interesting facts coucerning many old settlers about Maple Plain and Long Lake. He speaks of the Styners, Batdorfs, Capt. Louis H. Williams, Joseph Cloyd, Mrs. Wm Kissinger, Dickey Christlieb, Knettle Gilver. He says Hon Frank Christlieb wants to sell out and go to California. He mentions the Lydiards, John Geddes McFarland and has some quite humerous remarks about most of them. He concluhes as follows:

"I wish to conclude by recording what I regard as a very important fact, unrealized by the great majority of newspaper editors and writers and certainly nothing could be more to the point, than this I find regardless of previous conditions of servitude, or their politics these men in the country, men who read or think—the great middle class, upon whom the country's welfare depends; these men without an exception, are persuaded that things are out of joint, that for years past and continued in the present, monopolies reap the results of industry and legitimate labor. The products of the soil, essential to, and designed for the welfare of man, all, under the interference with and ignoring of the legitimate use and right relations, or the want of equable and just laws governing these, injustice is done the masses to the aggrandizement of the classes.

Now, Mr Editor. with this everywhere existing and serious persuasion, how long will it take our nasty and conceited daily newspaper writers to convince this great class of ernest men by daily ridicule and every way unworthy aspersions of their intelligence and concern for their own and their country's welfare? True this easily controlling element with their natural allies from the cities,, are not united, and in many cases, not clearily convinced, in regard to the remedy—but, I believe what is meant to be set forth above is absolute truth.

With these few lines I desist from my penful labors Yours as eyer,

JOSHUA WILLIAMS."

He was also a member of the Orono Lodge I. O. O. The annual school meeting in this village passed off unusually quiet. For a time it seemed as if the meeting might prove to be a failure for the want of a quorum, but finally through the perseverance of some parties a quorum was obtained. Officers elected were; A. C. Baily, clerk, and J. H. Lydiard, Treasurer.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Not much neighborhood news to write about this week, for everything is a little out of joint and the farmers are so very busy in their harvest that they havent even time to talk politics or go fishing. It is thought that the wheat and oat crops will turn out rather better than was expected two or three weeks ago and we hope this may prove true for there has already been a goodeal of busiress done on this present crop. But all on paper as yet.

The hay crop is very light this year. The heavy rains we had last week were very much needed, yet they caused a goodeal of damage too.

The school meeting in Dist. 102 was quite well attended, voted to have 8 months school during the year and voted a tax of $200 for teachers wages and current expenses. D. Omera will teach the winter term of school.

Most of the grain will be cut during the present week if the weather keeps fine.

Rev. O. R. Jenks will preach at Armstrong A. C. Church a week from next Friday, at 7:30 P. M.

G. W. Bradford who has been on the sick list for more than a year is not so well again.

The fruit crop with us is very light this year.

BORN,—to Mr. and Mrs. John Hamilton, 17 th. present month, a boy. All are doing well.

It is said by some that times are on the look up, this is good news if true.

And help to fill the milking-pail?

THE Egyptians believed that the soul lived only as long as the body endured, hence their reason for embalming the body to make it last as long as possible. It is estimated that altogether there are 400,000,000 mummies in Egypt.

A VETERINARY surgeon in Missouri was called a few days ago to find the reason for an odd hard bunch on a horse's shoulder. He lanced the swelling and found in the center of it a silver dime. The corner grocery clubs are now busy with the question, how did it get there?

EX-GOV. ROBERT L. TAYLOR lectured in Asheville, N. C., some time ago on "The Fiddle and the Bow." Speaking of the drink disease he said: "If I were a wife with a drunken husband I would fill him so full of bichloride of gold that he would jingle as he walked and tinkle as he talked."

BUT one retired justice of the supreme court of the United States is living. He is William Strong, of Pennsylvania, who is now in his 86th year. Judge Strong is the oldest public man of national prominence in the United States, and is as hale and hearty as either Bismarck or Gladstone.

THE bicycle has been accused of a good many things; the latest is that it is the cause of a heavy decline in the sale of a great deal of summer literature, the flash novels that flourish in the hot days when that sort of stuff sells best. If there is anything in this theory it is a strong point in favor of the wheel.

THE New York Journal of Commerce estimates that if the whole power of the volume of water passing over Niagara Falls could be utilized, it would equal the power that could be generated daily by the coal of all the coal mines worked by man. Only a small fraction of the Niagara power is utilized by the canal recently completed.

THE interior department at Washington is now successfully operating its own telephone system. Every head of bureau or division has upon his desk a movable apparatus consisting of receiver and transmitter, and it is but an instant's work to call up the central office located in the building and run by one operator and get connection with any other official.

THE hard times in this country do not seem to have diminished the exodus of Americans to Europe. The agent of one of the leading steamship companies says the European travel has been greater this summer than ever before, and so great is the number of Americans now in Europe that it is impossible for applicants to secure return accommodations on the steamers before October 1, the berths having all been taken in advance.

HERE is the way, says the Louisville Commercial, a well-known gentleman puts the cycle craze in a nutshell: "I had arranged to have a new walk laid in front of my house, and it was necessary to do some other work in connection. The morning the work was to commence the contractor arrived on his wheel. A few minutes later the plumber arrived—on a wheel. Then the carpenter came—on a wheel. Next the foreman of the gang—on his wheel. And then I left—on a wheel."

IT is estimated that last year more than 200,000 wheels were manufactured by the different companies engaged in the production of bicycles; and this year, with greatly increased facilities and improved machinery, together with a large increase in the number of producers, the product will reach nearly 400,000. What it can be next year can only be guessed at. There is no denying that this year's business has been held in check by a positive inability to supply the demand for wheels of every description, and as a result the manufacture is being greatly enlarged.

A TELEGRAM says that Thomas Foote, aged 22 years, died recently in Bainbridge, N. Y., after a most eccentric career. When he ate beef he bellowed like a bull, and if it were mutton he bleated like a sheep. If he ate chickens he scratched the earth for worms. One day his father gave him some squirrel meat, whereupon he ran up a tree, and in trying to jump to another fell and was killed. Either the father did not give this extraordinary creature squirrel food a moment too soon or the story shows the effect of the heated term on the average liar in the Empire state.

THE statement of Mark Twain made under oath in proceedings in court that he is practically penniless will occasion universal regret. Few writers have given so much pleasure to so large a circle of readers. It was supposed that his literary labors had brought him a generous fortune which, now that he is approaching old age, would have given him the opportunity to rest and enjoy the reward of his toil. This proves not to be the case, but, undaunted by the situation, the genial humorist is going to work again, and, in addition to his writing, proposes to make a lecture tour.

STEAMERS COLLIDE.

300cres Perish in Italian Waters at Dead of Night.

Sleeping Passengers Awake Only to Meet Death by Drowning in the Gulf of Spezzia—Unfortunates Number One Hundred and Forty-Eight.

LA SPIEZZIA, Italy, July 23.—A terrible accident, resulting in the loss of 148 lives, occurred near the mouth of the Gulf of Spezzia. At 1:30 a. m. the steamers Ortigia and Maria P. ran into each other and the latter vessel was so badly damaged that she sank in a very short time. The Maria P. had on board, in addition to her crew, 178 passengers, bound from Naples for the River Plate, by far the larger part of whom were emigrants. The night was pitch dark when the collision occurred and the scene on board the sinking steamer almost defies description. Most of the passengers were asleep in the bunks at the time, and were awakened by the crashing of the steamer's plates, deck beams and deck planks. They were panic-stricken and rushed pell-mell on deck, where they ran hither and thither calling upon the saints to save them.

From the reports of the disaster received here, it is impossible to determine whether any attempt was made by the Maria P. to clear away and launch her sailboats, to attempt to rescue the passengers, but, judging from the accounts given by the excited survivors, it is surmised that the steamer went down too quickly to allow of this being done, though one boat got away. The blackness of the night added to the terror of those on board, and it is understood that some of the passengers, crazed with fear, jumped overboard.

The force of the collision was terrific. The Ortigia struck the Maria P. squarely on the starboard side and her stem penetrated the ill-fated steamer for a distance of 18 feet. When she backed out a great volume of water poured through the orifice and the vessel began almost immediately to settle. No mention is made of the Ortigia lowering boats to attempt to rescue the imperilled people on the Maria P.

SPEZZIA, July 24.—Additional details of the collision between the Italian steamships Ortigia and Maria P. and the sinking of the latter in the gulf of Genoa, include the testimony of the lookouts on both vessels that they sighted each other too late to avert the collision. Each also charges that the captain and mate of the other vessel were asleep in their bunks when they should have been on deck.

STAMBULOFF IS DEAD.

The Bulgarian Statesman Assassinated in the Streets of Sofia.

SOFIA, July 20.—Stefan M. Stambuloff, ex-prime minister of Bulgaria, died at half-past 3 o'clock Thursday morning from the effects of the wounds inflicted upon him Monday evening when he was returning to his home from the Union club.

Only 40 years of age, he had earned for himself the title of the "Bismarck of Bulgaria," and his last words were:

EX-PREMIER STAMBULOFF.

"God protect Bulgaria." His death has intensified the bitter feeling that exists between his partisans and the supporters of the present government, and it has been freely charged that Prince Ferdinand and his ministers were directly responsible for his assassination.

BOYCOTT FOR BANKS.

General Master Workman Sovereign Issues a Manifesto.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—A morning paper prints the outlines of a manifesto to be issued by General Master Workman Sovereign of the Knights of Labor for the boycott of all national banks. It will be addressed to the Knights of Labor, the Farmers' Alliance, the people's party, Reform club and kindred societies, reciting "the wrongs of the toiling thousands, and their sufferings at the hands of the money-making power," and a call for a boycott of national bank notes in all dealings between individuals. It is to go into effect September 1.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 23.—A workingman, who refused to give his name, declined to accept $15 in national bank notes in payment of a bill at the post office Saturday. Assistant Postmaster Cruikshank then tendered him other money, which he accepted. The stranger's conduct was in obedience to Grand Master Sovereign's order to boycott national bank notes, and has been the first and only effort here to enforce the boycott.

Storms in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 20.—The storm which struck this section at 1 o'clock Thursday morning was the severest in several years, the fall of rain in St. Paul and Minneapolis being over 2 inches. The destruction was the greatest along the river between St. Paul and La Crosse, the washouts on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul being so serious that trains could not run on that road. Several of the lines' afternoon trains, including the fast mail, were brought in many hours late over the Burlington's tracks.

Minneapolis Claims 208,242.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 23.—The count of the names in the city directory has been completed, showing there are 92,552 names in the entire book, not counting removals and deaths. On the basis of 2¼ per cent. this shows a population of 231,180 persons within the city limits. In order that the estimate may be of the most conservative character possible the City Directory company has decided to use only the multiple of 2¼, which would place the population at 208,242.

NOT SO LIVELY.

Midsummer Dullness Makes Itself Felt in Business.

NEW YORK, July 22.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"The week's news is not entirely encouraging, but is all the more natural because there are signs of midsummer dullness. Wheat prospects are not quite so good as last week, but still there are lower prices, as corn and cotton have been lowered. The exports of gold and the less favorable treasury returns for July are not unexpected and mean nothing as to coming business. There is a perceptible decrease in the demand for most manufactured products and the actual distribution to consumers naturally lessens in midsummer. There are still numerous advances in wages, but strikes grow more numerous and important.

"Money is still abundant, and, while there is much more activity in commercial loans, it is not what would appear if all industries were fully employed. The volume of exchanges continues nearly as large as in 1892, because of the delay in spring operations, and, though rapidly shrinking to summer proportions, is 27 per cent. larger than last year.

"The future turns on crops, and the market reflects a prevailing belief that the crops are to be fair. Stocks carried over are such that a yield of 7,000,000 bales of cotton and 120,000,000 bushels of wheat would meet all needs, but lower prices propheey larger yields, and of corn probably the largest on record.

"Western receipts of wheat, not half last year's, express disappointment at prices, while exports for the week, about a quarter of last year's, show that foreign dealers are not regarding the situation with anxiety. Nor do British accounts indicate any anxiety about cotton, while efforts are reported by some American mills to sell part of the large stocks taken some months ago, apparently exceeding their needs for the year. If unfavorable to some speculators, these are cheering indications, for it is better to have fair crops than to get higher prices for what remains.

"Orders have so accumulated in iron products that some works forego the usual summer rest, and eastern furnaces soon to begin blast will add about 5,000 tons weekly to the production. Yet the week has been in new business the dullest since the rise in prices began, as many hesitate to buy after so great an advance. The average of all prices is 1 per cent. higher for the week and 28.3 per cent. higher than February 1.

"Wool advanced in the first half of July, and is now 7 per cent. higher than a year ago. Manufacturers do not support the advance and are buying only for immediate needs. Cotton mills continue to enjoy a large business, and several have advanced wages during the week. New business in boots and shoes is limited. Foreign trade continues unfavorable, with a decrease of 10 per cent. in exports this month and an increase of 25 per cent. in imports.

"Failures in eleven days of July show liabilities of $3,563,982 this year against $2,630,308 last year. Failures for the week have been 256 in the United States against 226 last year and 39 in Canada against 44 last year."

EVILS OF BAD BOOKS.

They Are Pointed Out in a Discussion of the Pan-American Congress.

TORONTO, Ont., July 24.—Monday at the pan-American congress the daily press, or the "up-to-date" section of it, came in for a good deal of condemnation. The papers were all by men engaged in work on the religious and educational press. But some timely hits were nevertheless given.

Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Chicago, for thirty-one years editor of the Northwestern Advocate, dealt with the alarming evils which were threatening the youth through bad books. He believed that the most efficient manner of coping with the danger was to increase the supply of good books or good papers. "I would rather write an elevating book for the youth," said he, emphatically, "than be the author of a book like 'Paradise Lost' or be the president of a peace congress which would be successful in the abolition of war from the face of the earth." Dr. Edwards condemned the party journal, and said that the public was clamoring to have party organs superseded by those which advocated public reform.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Arrested.

Sheriff McKenzie of Red Wing arrested Private Henry Ivey, 3d United States infantry, charged with being one of the soldiers who enticed the two girls from the state training school at Red Wing on the evening of June 24, and he was taken to Wabasha and put in the county jail to await a hearing, which will probably be had as soon as possible. Fred Violet, of Company D, arrested on Friday, is also in jail awaiting a hearing on the same charge.

Three others connected with this crime are now fugitives from justice and deserters from the army—Ernest Haines, who was arrested at Ft. Snelling last Friday and made his escape from the guard; Private Blanchard, of Company C, who deserted from Camp Lakeview yesterday morning, and a private who deserted camp the first of last week. Private Violet, of Company B, a brother of the Company G man now in the county jail, is in the guard house at Camp Lakeview. He is held for fear that the Company D man may not prove to be the Violet wanted.

Officers of the regiment say that the girls were only too willing to come along with the regiment, and needed no enticing. They are, however, giving the officers of the law all the assistance possible in ferreting out the guilty party. The privates of the regiment interviewed feel the disgrace thus brought upon the regiment and express the hope that, if guilty, the men reap the full punishment for the atrocious crime.

Completed.

The center of administration building at the state hospital at Rochester is practically completed. It is 70 by 90 feet, four stories high, and from the ground to the top of the ornamented copper covered dome topped tower 175 feet. Inside the tower is an iron spiral stairway. The entire structure is of steel and entirely fireproof, roofed with terra cotta and slate over a steel frame. A double flight of stone steps leads to the main entrance. Set into the wall of the corridor are 10 pilasters with corinthian capitals. The floor is paved with Italian marble, the base and border being Tennessee marble. The ceiling is carved and lavishly frescoed. The woodwork is oak, stained red to match the walls. The main staircase at back is of iron, with slate steps eight feet broad, dividing into two sets of stairs four feet wide on either side. The balustrade is finished in electric plate. The physicians' suite of rooms occupy the second and third stories. The Johnson electric steam regulator is used throughout. S. B. Egan, state superintendent of construction, has been in charge. Cost $56,400. Next month will commence on the new kitchen, cold storage, dining and amusement halls, to the rear of the administration building.

Harry Wants It.

The fact that the representative of the Travelers' Insurance Company did not know of any claim filed by Harry Hayward for the insurance on Miss Ging's life, may have been his fault, or it may not. It is a fact, however, that Harry Hayward signed an application of that sort and that it was signed before Deputy Phil Megaarden, who took Harry's acknowledgment to the application. It was made necessary, too, by the fact that the time for filing such an application had almost expired.

Walter Shumaker, Erwin's assistant, brought over the formal order staying Hayward's execution, and filed it with the clerk. When asked as to the insurance, he replied:

"We don't want to say anything about that at all; we don't want to be quoted on that subject."

Squelched.

Secretary of State Berg was shown the article which appeared in a Minneapolis paper, charging that the St. Paul citizens' census committee is engaged in a secret, systematic attempt to pad the census returns in this city. Mr. Berg read the article attentively, and said:

"I am in a position to say that there is absolutely nothing in this sensational report. The St. Paul census committee has kept nothing back from me in its work. What it is doing is exactly what a similar committee in Minneapolis is doing, viz: attempting to get a full and complete census."

News in Brief.

At a special school meeting at Winthrop it was voted to issue bonds for $7,000 to build a new school house.

Burglars entered the residence of Dr. George A. Maloy, at St. Cloud, and carried away considerable jewelry.

J. W. Young's drug store and contents at Gray Eagle were burned. The loss is total, covered by insurance.

Work has been commenced on the new cell house at the reformatory at St. Cloud.

The 10-year-old son of T. Schleppenbach, of Melrose, was struck by lightning and instantly killed.

The 2-year-old daughter of August Bishop, living eight miles north of Melrose, had both legs and one arm cut off by falling in front of a mower. She will probably die.

George Harvey, of Minneapolis, was found guilty of driving a horse to death and the penalty of $100 fine or 90 days' imprisonment was imposed upon him. This is the extreme punishment within the power of the municipal court.

Burglars touched a Milaca, Minn., store for $470 cash.

Mrs. Sarah Williams and her son-in-law, Frank Gammon, were bound over to the district court at St. Cloud, charged with setting fire to the Park Hotel on July 4. They were admitted to bail in the sum of $600 each, which was furnished. The case promises to be one of unusual interest. The prosecution claims to have a very strong case. There have been similar fires in St. Cloud recently which point to incendiarism.

Conrad Westkemper, a Spring Hill farmer, was thrown from a mower and badly cut about the hands by a sickle.

The 11-year-old son of Swan Bloom, of Welch, had his foot so badly injured by a hay fork, run by horse power, that amputation was necessary.

Secretary of State Berg has decided to make a separate census of the inmates of all of the state institutions. In no case will they be credited to the town where the institution is located. He holds that these inmates are not citizens and should not be counted as such.

Arthur Dunnett, living two miles west of Rochester, aged 25, was found by his wife dead under a binder, with his head crushed.

A WESTERN WOOING.

BY KATE M. CLEARY.

People had become rather tired of the romance. Perhaps in part because it had ceased to be romantic. When first Andulasia Stebbins had come out from Illinois to live with her mother and stepfather on the Nebraska prairie it was considered by the neighboring farmer folk quite proper, probable and desirable that Ira Harris, whose half-section joined that of her relatives, should fall in love with her—which he promptly did.

Ira was thirty, stout, stolid, loutish, methodical. He was a successful man. This is hardly to be explained of a person with the characteristics mentioned unless one includes selfishness. To be supremely selfish is so frequently to be successful. At the time of their meeting Andulasia was twenty-seven. There are women of twenty-seven and women of twenty-seven. She was one of the latter. With her square figure, her unequivocal complexion, her dull brown hair, and her calculating eyes she looked her years. One would never excuse her mistakes on the ground of immaturity. One could never condone them on that of impulse. Indeed, to attribute to her certain errors would be subtle flattery. She was not the kind of a woman who is ordinarily subjected to temptation.

Harris, however, accepted her propinquity and her affection much as he accepted the drought or the price of hogs. He was willing she should decline the company of other men on his account. He reasoned that if her stepfather, old man Solveriny, were to clear off the mortgage on his place and die, and if the two sickly young Solverinys died also, she would be wealthy in her own right, as wealth is estimated in the Philistine west. Consequently it might prove a prudent proceeding to wait for Andulasia.

So he waited.

A year after their acquaintance began he gave her an inkling of his sentiments. Her concurrence with his views was almost pathetic. It was alert, reciprocal, conclusive. Matrimony at some indefinite date they might look forward to. Such an indiscretion at the present time would be a tremendous mistake.

"Of course, Ira," she said, "land's land. And if my stepfather and your mother—who is mighty feeble, I notice—and the twins don't die there won't be any land for us worth mentioning, much less a-marryin' on."

Nevertheless she felt as the years, two, three, four passed, that her acceptance of his suggestion had been a trifle overemphatic and unconsidered. Fate, she could not in justice rail against. One of the twins succumbed to ivy poisoning. The other, a few months later, was run down by the train. Andulasia's stepfather went the way of the apoplectic, and Ira's mother, with utter disregard for the sensation she might have caused, slipped from life in the most meek, genteel and unimpressive manner imaginable. Then there was only Ira on one farm, and Andulasia and her mother on the other. No apparent obstacle intervened. Still Ira did not speak, and it was seven years since Andulasia had come from Illinois. He frequently visited her, helped her, and deferred to her. He carried her butter and eggs into town and "traded" them; when the circus was in the county seat, he drove her there; he took her into the side show where the fat woman was on exhibition; he bought her pink lemonade, and peanuts, and hot candy made on the grounds. He escorted her to the merry-go-round at Mahaska and rode side by side with her on the spotted ponies. He drove her into town twice a week. They attended prayer meeting together. They both professed religion at the revival. He bought eleven tickets for her crazy quilt raffle. He was in all things her constant and dependable cavalier, but he never once mentioned marriage—never once.

In this manner eight more years passed. She was forty-two. He was forty-five. He was stouter, more stolid. She had some wrinkles, gold fillings in her teeth, a reputation for irascibility—also a comfortable bank account.

The two continued to drive across the majestic prairies in all kinds of marvelous nights and days. But the prose of life had so eaten into their hearts they saw nothing of the beauty surrounding them, heard none of nature's music. For them there was no charm in the blossoming miracle of dawn, the yellow sweep of the ripe corn, the translucence of the moonlight, the blue infinity of space, the meadowlark's gay vest, the fugitive radiance on the bluffs, the restless shiver of the cottonwoods, the ocean shadows of the wheat, the swiftness of the gopher, the snow of wild plum blooms by the creek, the rank and file of goldenrod flanking the dusty roads. And they never heard the pattering flight of the quail, nor the swallow's swerving wing, nor the scurry of the rabbit, nor the murmur of the maples, nor the rustle of the sunflowers, nor the first crackle of the frost, nor the breaking of the ice, nor the gossip of the wild grass, never—never.

Theirs were the years the majority of prairie people know. Always vague, unrestful, apprehensive, material. Never gay, never educational. If hopeful, elated; if despairing, sullen; if contented, bovine. It is rather hard to be philosophical in a country the conditions of which one day promise prosperity and leisure, and after the next hail or windstorm express starvation.

One day Ira brought Andulasia a letter. It was from her mother's brother who lived in Iowa. He was dying. He wished to see her. She handed Ira the letter.

"Shall I go?" she asked.

Harris deliberated. "Has he money?" he questioned.

"Yes."

"Then go."

He saw her off the next day. She wore a new dress that didn't fit in the back. The skirt was too short at the sides. Her shoes were dusty. The heat had taken the curl out of her bangs. She had forgotten to bring the piece of chamois skin with the powder on it, which she was in the habit of using surreptitiously. Her nose shone as if polished. She wore kid gloves which were too large.

The train was late. As they walked up and down the platform she talked to Ira steadily and monotonously. She warned him about the brindle cow, and advised him concerning a piece of his fence which needed repairing.

He heard her, but all the time he was watching a girl who played with the agent's children in a green patch near the station. She was a little blonde sprite who had come from Omaha to visit the agent's wife.

"Of course," he said.

"And you won't forget about the chopped feed?"

He gave her an intense glance. "How could I?"

"You'll see that Star gets well watered?"

"I'll attend to it."

"You'll have Alvy Markham pull parsley for the young pigs?"

"I will."

"And—O, yes! If mother seems to feel another fit coming on you'll get her a bottle of Indian relief cure at the drug store."

The train steamed in. Andulasia went away. Ira did not kiss her. She was relieved—and disappointed. The conductor and the train boy might have laughed. But then he should have cared enough to risk that.

When the train had pulled out and was well around the bend, Harris, who had lingered on the platform, asked the agent to introduce him to his visitor. The agent did so.

Harris joined in the games of the children. He made himself clumsily delightful. Soda water was unknown in that particular small town, but Ira did the next best thing. He bought bananas and chocolate drops with a reckless liberality which would have made the absent Andulasia doubt his sanity could she but have been aware of his behavior.

He came to the depot the next day, the next and the next. The little visitor with the flax-flower eyes and yellow hair smiled divinely.

"The children," she confided to the agent's wife, "are having such a good time. It is all great fun."

She even thought it was great fun when she went buggy riding with Mr. Harris.

"Take me past your farm," she commanded.

He grew red with ecstasy at the request. He explained apologetically many conditions of his property as they drove by.

Three weeks passed—four. Harris had several letters from Iowa. The contents of the letters were chiefly relative to hogs, and pasturage, and baled hay, and discounts. Ira did not actually dread Andulasia's return, but he would have preferred to postpone it indefinitely. To be sure, they had considered the possibility of an engagement once, but he had never been really engaged to her.

As for Alys, was there ever such an eye, such a hand, such a voice, such a foot, such a smile. To be sure he had once met Alys walking home from church with the lumberman. But then the lumberman was only young and good looking. It was well known he was conducting the yard for an English firm on a salary. To compare Vail to him—Harris—who was so "well fixed!" There could be no comparison.

One evening in late summer, when Ira was jogging into town, he settled mentally all minor matters to his satisfaction. He decided to whom he would rent his farm, the kind of house he would build in town, the direction his wedding journey would take, the brotherly letter he would leave for Andulasia, and the invitation he would send the lumberman to be present at his wedding.

He dismounted at the post office, which was also the general store and tin shop. There was a letter for him—a letter from Andulasia.

"DEAR IRA: Things is all upset. Uncle John died a week ago. They can't find no will, and I'm tired waiting for dead men's stockings. Meet me night after to-morrow. Your

"ANDULASIA STEBEINS."

Harris smiled curiously as he stuffed the letter in his pocket. He was thinking of the Omaha girl. The next night Andulasia arrived. She was fatter than ever. Her Eton suit was crumpled. She wore a shirt waist. It was voluminous and not immaculate.

"Well, it's you, Ira. I'm clean beat. Put them things in the buggy while I get some sody and yeast up-town."

"Up-town" Miss Stebbins learned several things, chief of which was that Ira Harris had transferred his affections to Miss Alys Lane.

Half way home Andulasia said quietly:

"I hear you reckon to marry Miss Lane."

Her composure, the loss of her expected fortune, the witchery of Alys, all gave Harris courage.

"I—I was figgerin' some on it," he avowed.

He drove Andulasia to her home, but she did not again broach the subject.

He went back to town that evening. He met Alys at an ice-cream sociable. He gained grace of heart and proposed.

She laughed gently.

"I am honored, Mr. Harris, of course," she said. "But I always supposed you were engaged to Miss Stebbins. I am to marry Mr. Vail at Christmas."

The following evening, Ira, feeling exceedingly depressed, went to call on Andulasia. He found her talking with a brother farmer, a widower with three children. He asked to speak to her a moment alone.

"Fact is, Andulasia," he said, "it's you I want. I fancied for awhile I'd like that silly little thing. I must have been kind of hypternized. I'm sure now it's you I want."

Andulasia smiled—a peculiar smile. "I've just promised to marry Mr. Muggs. He asked me last night before he found out what you know."

"What I know? Andulasia!"

"Yes. The news that come in on the noon train, about the will being found, and me getting seven thousand dollars, and—"

"Andulasia!"

What a fine woman she was. Why had he never noticed that fact before?

"It's true!" she declared triumphantly.

"But," he fairly howled, "I've been meaning for fifteen years to marry you, Andulasia!"

"Then, why didn't you?" inquired Andulasia.

He remembered some lines he had once read. It would be quite safe to repeat them as original, for Andulasia never read anything.

"I feared my fate too much," he protested, striking his breast dramatically, "and my deserts was too small!"

He did not impress Andulasia. She turned scornfully away to where Mr. Muggs waited.

"Go back," she counseled, "to that yeller-haired girl at the depot."

He did go back, but not to the depot.

"Eh?" said the saloonkeeper. "We don't often see you, Mr. Harris."

"No. But I feel to-night as if I'd got a chill. I'll take some straight."—Chicago Tribune.

FOR AND AGAINST.

Harvey Meets Horr in the Arena of Debate.

The Wordy Battle Takes Place in Chicago—"Coin's Financial School" the Center of Discussion—Synopsis of the Arguments.

Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.

CHICAGO, July 19.—The second session of the Horr-Harvey silver debate began at 2 o'clock p. m. Wednesday in the auditorium of the Illinois club before the same limited audience. Mr. Horr began by quoting Hallam's "Middle Ages" as authority to prove the fallacy of Mr. Harvey's statements in his book regarding the degeneracy of the world commercially in the fifteenth century as a result of the depreciation of silver. He cited from Prof. James E. Thoroid Rogers to refute the statement made by Mr. Harvey from his book that the price of wheat had fallen in that period and that the lot of the toiling masses became more miserable with the passage from the eighth to the fifteenth century, as charged by Mr. Harvey. Leber, Malthus and Hyndman were also cited in contradiction of the silver champion's fifteenth century statements.

Mr. Harvey said he had not intended to argue with Mr. Horr that the monetary commission, from the report of which the quotation was made, did not know what it was talking about. He declined to have his mind diverted from the regular argument and logical arrangement of the debate. He declared that the debate so far had settled the questions as to what was the money of the constitution, what was the unit of value as fixed by the framers of the constitution, in favor of his book.

The contestants became involved in a short and sharp argument as to the reason and underlying motive of Mr. Harvey in omitting to state in his quotation of the act making legal tender of foreign coin, that congress, in the same act, also made gold coins legal tender. The New Yorker insinuated that the author did so to mislead his readers into believing congress considered silver the most important, which was not true.

Mr. Harvey retorted: "When a man is discussing cattle he does not talk hogs. When a man is discussing silver and the manner in which it was treated by our forefathers and comparing it with the way in which it is treated by you people now, it was not necessary to refer to how they treated gold or copper." He added that he had left out what was unnecessary for him to state in establishing the principle that the laws made foreign silver legal tender.

After some discussion as to whether the statute had been quoted correctly in Coin's School, Mr. Horr proceeded in defense of the law of 1873, and claimed that no law had ever been passed by congress which was freer from taint. He defied Mr. Harvey to produce one scintilla of evidence in proof of his charge that it was a scheme to demonetize silver concocted in London. That law was passed because experience showed that gold would not circulate under the ratio of 15 to 1. The cheaper dollar, which was silver, had driven the gold currency out of the United States. The history of that legislation would bear him out in stating that that, and that only, was the reason for changing the ratio between the two metals.

Mr. Harvey—Mr. Horr says that I have no proof that the scheme was concocted in London to demonetize silver in the United States. When I was a boy I went into a courthouse one day to hear a criminal trial, and I heard a lawyer say: "When a crime is committed and you want to detect the criminal look for the man that is benefited by the crime." Reasoning by induction will more invariably locate the criminal than any uncertain human testimony. Silver was demonetized in England, and in England only, prior to the day it was demonetized in this country. That was where the movement started—that is another evidence. London bankers initiated the Paris conference of 1867, at which Mr. John Sherman was present; therefore I have the right to say the conspiracy originated in London.

Thursday.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Thursday's Harvey-Horr debate was marked by considerable acrimony on the part of both speakers. In beginning, Mr. Horr said he had a personal explanation to make. He quoted the following paragraph from his opponent's argument of Wednesday:

"These principles are for the selfish interests of money lenders and Mr. Horr is here advocating them."

Mr. Horr said he took this as a reflection on his character. He continued:

"I am not a money-lender. I have no interest in any bank or other institution of like character. I was raised on a farm, and my first work was done for $10 a month. I used to dig ditches for a living and was at one time a brakeman on a railroad. When I was elevated to the position of baggagemaster it was the proudest moment of my life. I therefore come into this debate, as my friend will find out before he gets through, to advocate those principles which will be for the best interests of the working classes from which I come. I desire to say, however, that I have no prejudice against any man who has been more fortunate than I. I do not think a man is necessarily a scoundrel because he saves more than he spends. I even go so far as to say a man can be a director of a national bank and still maintain his integrity."

Mr. Harvey explained that when he said Mr. Horr advocated the principles of money-lenders, he did not mean to say Mr. Horr himself was a money-lender. He thought, however, in giving the history of his life, Mr. Horr should not have omitted to state that he had at one time been a bank president.

Mr. Harvey also said: "Mr. Horr and numerous employes of newspaper corporations and other corporations are in part, many of them, representing their honest convictions, and I accord that to the honorable gentleman from New York. Many of them never stop to analyze the question, the great principle that must make or unmake the republic in which they live. It is only a question of salary which they consider.

"The value of the debate Wednesday was this: 'A studied misrepresentation has gone before the people of the United States that there was only $8,000,000 of silver coined by the United States government prior to 1873. Now, meeting face to face with a representative of the other side of the question, this debate now carries to the people of the United States the admitted fact that there was $142,000,000 of silver coined prior to 1873."

Mr. Horr took up the question of the origin of the law of 1873. He said it was drafted after consulting a large number of experts, who were apt to know a little more about the monetary question than those who had never studied it at all. He denied that the bill had its origin in England or anywhere except in the brains of the people who were looking after the coinage interests of the United States. He defied Mr. Harvey, not by assertion, to prove one single item that had any reference to the British people controlling or directing the matter.

Mr. Harvey—"By examining the records of the day and the newspapers we find there was an era of corruption in congress at that time. Clinton Colgate confessed before the ways and means committee of 1873 to the use of money to influence the incorporation of special features in the internal revenue bill, testifying among other things, that Charles Sherman, of Ohio, a brother of Senator Sherman, had been paid $10,000 by the New York stock exchange in connection with the revenue bill. The fact developed that while the money had not been paid, Judge Sherman had rendered a bill to the exchange for his services, as he claimed, for securing the services of his brother, Senator Sherman, to put the bill through. Judge Sherman was then a United States district judge."

After denouncing the attempt of Mr. Harvey to "smirch the congress of the United States" as infamous, Mr. Horr said: "The people of this country—and the congressman is no exception—as an average are upright, honest business men. I admit that Judge Sherman was guilty of a crime. That was never in any way connected with his brother John Sherman, and you know it. They exonerated him. Judge Sherman resigned immediately, they drove him from the bench. But what has that to do with the question whether Mr. Knox openly and squarely presented this bill to congress? It was debated in the senate for three days. It came to a vote in the senate January 10, 1874, and passed by a yea and nay vote. The senators from the Pacific slope voted for it and Senator Sherman voted against it. The Fifty-first congress died without action having been taken on the bill."

Mr. Horr—"Upon the face of his own bill there is a proof that to any man who has studied this question is conclusive. The whole attempt to prove that any such bill ever went from the house and senate is false. Does any man in his senses believe that they ever undertook to give free coinage of silver to a standard dollar of 384 grains. The old dollar was not reinstated, but the silver dollar was reduced in weight from 412½ grains to 384 grains and made a subsidiary coin like all the other silver coins of the United States.

The discussion of the act of 1873 was continued until 1 o'clock, when at the request of Mr. Horr adjournment was taken until 10 a. m. Saturday.

Saturday.

CHICAGO, July 23.—After a day's rest for the participants, the Horr-Harvey debate was resumed at 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

The discussion of the act of 1873 by which silver was demonetized was then taken up. Mr. Potter's part in the transaction being the subject. The author of "Coin" quoted freely from the Congressional Record to show that Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, moved to dispense with the reading of the substitute bill demonetizing silver. "Here was an attempt," said Mr. Harvey, "to legislate on the life blood of a nation without reading the bill."

Resuming the discussion of the law of 1873, Mr. Horr quoted from W. A. Shaw's "History of Currency" in reference to the first international monetary conference, held in Paris in 1867, to show that the subject was being agitated by the civilized nations of the world. All the nations except Holland declared in favor of the standard after eight daily sessions. It was after this action, in which the United States participated that the American experts commenced to examine the question and see what legislation should be enacted. The bill of 1873 simply carried out a resolution of all those civilized nations of the world.

Mr. Horr—A provision had been introduced in the house, and was a part of the bill, for coining a dollar precisely like the five-franc piece in use in France—no doubt about it. The senate struck that provision out of it and substituted the trade dollar for that 384-grain dollar.

Mr. Harvey—If you will show me from the record of the proceedings in the senate on that day that the senate struck out that dollar, we will stop this debate right here.

Mr. Horr—I have not the record. The law, when it was passed, had the trade dollar in it. Do you deny that? And did not that take the place of the other dollar?

Mr. Harvey—No, sir. (Laughter.)

Mr. Horr—I defy you to show anywhere a word that substantiates that position. It was a simple piece of legislation and bears that impression on its face. The only men who opposed that bill in the house were Clarkson N. Potter and Mr. Brooks, both millionaires from Wall street, both representing the very men that you say were trying to impose that bill upon this country for the purpose of aiding men who are rich. Was anything more contemptible than a proposition of that kind." He branded as a pure invention the "whole bracket business" of provisions which were purposely omitted from the bill which passed. He declared that the bill met with little opposition solely because no one cared at that time very much about the silver dollar.

Mr. Harvey—The other day, when Mr. Horr said that the bill before the senate, as shown by the Congressional Record, only had a trade dollar in it, I replied that when I got to the senate proceedings he would have to retreat from that position, and now he retreats of his own accord.

He spoke of the history of the bill in conference committee, "where the dirty work was done and the conspiracy culminated." The committee was not supposed to have reversed the action of the two houses on any points. "But they had. They had taken out the 384-grain dollar, the size of the French five-franc piece, the dollar that was to 'float around the world,' the dollar that would have put our system on the same basis ratio with France and the Latin union." The report of the senate finance committee turned up so altered as to show that the committee reported an amendment to strike out the silver dollar, so as to furnish the foundation for the conference committee's fraudulent action, although the section in which this occurs was passed as agreed on without any amendment at the time being considered to it.

Mr. Horr said he had never intimated that the 384-grain dollar was not at one time in the bill, but he denied that it was in any draft of the bill made anything but a subsidiary coin, and defied his opponent to prove that the clause making the gold dollar the unit of value was ever erased from the bill in any of the proceedings.

It was now Mr. Harvey's turn again and he continued reading from the Congressional Record on the passage of the substitute advocated by Mr. Hooper. In reply to a question, Mr. Hooper had said the bill made no changes in the existing coinage laws. Shortly afterward—within the hour—the bill was passed without being read. Mr. Harvey now went into the senate history of the bill. Senator Sherman, he alleged, and made frequent citations from the records in proof of his assertions, made repeated attempts to accelerate action on the bill when the matter was first brought up in the senate, and to convince the other senators that the bill was one of no importance whatever, and they need not give over an hour altogether to its consideration, "and in these things," continued the speaker, "he succeeded."

Monday.

CHICAGO, July 24.—Although the weather was cool and pleasant Monday the attendance at the Horr-Harvey debate dwindled down very perceptibly. There were just fifty-three persons present when Mr. Horr reopened the discussion, for the first time since the beginning of the debate reading from manuscript. During the nineteenth century all the great countries had adopted a gold standard, he asserted, but had not discarded silver. However, none of them had opened their mints to silver. He then dipped into the history of finance in France and was still talking of it when interrupted by the bell. An attack on Senator Morrill followed. He was not very careful of the truth, said Mr. Harvey, when he stated that no silver dollars had been coined for many years prior to 1873. Copies of the mint reports for several years previous to 1873 were here submitted showing that several millions of dollars had been coined during these periods. "Now," said the author of "Coin," "if Senator Morrill couldn't tell the truth in one particular I have a right to assume that he could not tell it in any."

Mr. Horr warmly defended Senator Morrill. He said: "When Senator Morrill made the assertion that there had been no silver dollars coined for many years prior to 1873, he did not mean to be taken literally. He meant that in comparison to the amount of gold coined there had been practically none coined, and that is true. Mr. Harvey has a way I do not like of trying to smirch the character of everybody who differs from him in opinion. Mr. Harvey admits that he made one bad misstatement in his book, and, according to his method of argument, I have a right to assume that he is wrong in everything."

Mr. Harvey turned to the discussion of bimetallism, taking up first that branch of it relating to unlimited coinage, and went into the history of the matter among other nations.

"It makes no difference," said Mr. Horr, "what the history of unlimited coinage is. It is admitted on every hand that all nations have now closed their mints to silver and that is the main point."

Mr. Horr quoted from Mr. Harvey's book that "the objection to independent bimetallism is that the parity between the two metals can not be maintained at our ratio of 16 to 1, that is, the gold 22 3-10 grains in the gold dollar will be worth more than the silver 371¼ grains in the silver dollar;" and "with silver remonetized, and a just and equitable standard of values, we can, if necessary, by act of congress reduce the number of grains in a gold dollar till it is the same value as the silver dollar. We can legislate the premium out of gold." He asked what becomes of Mr. Harvey's ratio of 16 to 1. Here is what he virtually says: "The gold dollar may be cut down if need be so that the ratio shall be 16 to ½." His mathematics, however, are as defective as his veracity. Mathematically 16 to ½ is the same as 32 to 1, so it is not the ratio he cares about.

Mr. Harvey—Mr. Horr says that I deny that the two metals can be kept in circulation at a fixed ratio. I have not said that, for they can be, as they have been in this country. I know they have attempted to make you believe that there was no gold in circulation in this country, or seeking the mints after 1850, but both were misrepresentations. Mr. Horr flies in the face of history when he says that silver was not used prior to 1873 as a measure of value. Silver was the unit in that coinage system regulating the size of the gold coins, but the two together were the measure of values, and that is what we mean by the double standard. Mr. Horr alludes to something I have said before, and then adds: "Cut the yardstick in two and it will make twice as many yards of cloth in the world." Now, in 1875, you doubled the length of the yard stick. You can see no harm in destroying the price of a man's property, cutting the price of his property half in two, but your eyes are wide open when any man proposes to even up with you by proposing to cut the gold dollar half in two. We don't wish to do that, either; we wish to put back in the coinage system the money that you demonetized in 1873.

Mr. Horr—It is possible that Mr. Harvey believes that the act of 1873 when it demonetized silver cut the price of the property of the world in two, and that prices immediately dropped 50 per cent. I was around the world in 1873 and I know that did not take place, and he knows it. You destroy one-half of the wheat in the world and the chances are that you will increase the value of wheat probably four times; but wheat is an article that people consume from year to year, or after a short time. Gold has been accumulating for ages, and if you should destroy the primary money quality of half the gold in the world you would not change the price of the metal one-half. As soon as the price would go up there is an enormous store laid away over the entire world that is not being used for money purposes that would at once seek the channels and be coined into money and take the place of the money that had been destroyed.

Referring to his previous quotations from Mr. Harvey's book, Mr. Horr said he read them for the purpose of getting at what the author desires to reach by the free coinage of silver, and said that what "Coin" is really after is a cheap dollar. He would reduce the value of the money unit of this country one half. Mr. Horr protested against the whole scheme, because it is an effort to cheapen labor. The greatest commodity ever placed on the markets of the world is labor. Is it best to cheapen the unit of value and decrease the purchasing value of our dollar? He was a believer in cheap prices and only opposed them when the cheapening of the price is at the expense of the men who do the work.

Mr. Harvey said that his opponent argued that the dear dollar is of more benefit to laborers than a cheaper dollar. He did not intend to let Mr. Horr cloak himself behind the laboring man. "You have cut in two the number of days that it is possible for men to find labor," he said: "you have put anywhere from 2,000,000 to 4,000,000 laboring men out of employment in this country entirely, and to those laboring men who are now destitute, and many of whose leaders are now lying in jail, you sing the sweet songs of the high purchasing power of the gold dollar—when he gets it. Mr. Harvey then delved into question of ratio and bimetallism and reviewed the historical position of silver in European countries.

Returning to the relation free coinage bears toward the laboring man, Mr. Horr said: "In 1879, when the question of metallic money became prominent in this country, we resumed specie payments, and the only money of final redemption was gold. Do you tell me that distress was abroad in the land from that on? Any man who says that must be ignorant of the history of work in the United States. Since this nation began, the years from 1879 to 1892 found our people better employed and at better wages than in any other same number of years since this government was formed. Four millions of men to-day out of employment. Where did you get your figures?"

Mr. Harvey—I said from 2,000,000 to 4,000,000.

Mr. Horr—There isn't any truth in either statement. In the years 1889-92 I was in thirty-one states of this union and during the entire time I did not visit a city where the people were not well employed at good wages and I know that any man who says that from 1879 to 1892 this country was in financial distress and that the laboring men were not then well employed is not well qualified to talk upon the subject, because that is not the fact.

Mr. Harvey congratulated the people on Mr. Horr's frank admission that over-production cuts no figure in this controversy.

Mr. Horr—I never said that.

Mr. Harvey referred to the national elections from 1884 to 1892 and said: "Now, since 1892 a flood of calamities has come. Don't you in this debate refer to the prosperity of this country from 1873 to 1893; don't you refer to the prosperity that has built up millionaires and multi-millionaires and strewn this country with millions of tramps and paupers and men that don't know how they are going to provide for their families in the coming year."

Redskins and Settlers Fight in Hoback Canyon, Wyo.

MARKET LAKE, Idaho, July 24.—Seventeen Indians were killed in the Indian troubles at Jackson Hole, Wyo., July 15. July 13 thirty men left Jackson Hole to arrest all Indians breaking the game laws of Wyoming. In Hoback canyon they surprised a camp of seventeen Indians and took them all prisoners and started with them for Jackson Hole. In the canyon they tried to escape, and all the Indians were killed except one papoose, who was brought into the Hole. There were 133 fresh elk skins in this camp. John H. ## KILLS HIS OWN MOTHER.

Charles Chappell, of Delavan, Wis., Thought She Was a Burglar.

MILWAUKEE, July 23.—A special from Delavan, Wis., says: Mrs. Mary A. Chappell, a widow 62 years of age, was shot and killed Sunday night by her son Charles, who lived with her. Mrs. Chappell imagined she heard burglars at the window, and so informed her son. He procured a revolver and, thinking his mother had gone back to her room, shot twice at a figure moving in the dark. The son ran for a physician, but his mother was dead when medical aid arrived. Monday morning a jury returned a verdict of accidental shooting and exonerated Chappell.

FATAL STORMS.

CINCINNATI, July 23.—Advices from different parts of Ohio and Kentucky report severe snowstorms Sunday night. These storms seem to have visited certain sections, while adjacent districts are as dry as ever.

At Howard's mill, near Mount Sterling, Ky., Green Garrett was struck by a cloudburst while riding along the highway. He and his horses were killed. Throughout the Ohio valley Monday the heat was intense.

Strike at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, July 23.—The fifteen or more leading ingrain carpet manufacturers whose employes are on strike Monday morning opened the doors of their mills in anticipation of a partial resumption at least. The proposition of the manufacturers was that the strikers return to work now at the old scale and continue at this rate of pay until November 1, when the 7½ per cent. increase asked for would be granted. This was rejected by the strikers, however, and none of them returned to work.

GOOD MANNERS.

Courtesy Is a Virtue and Comes From a Good Heart.

As to what constitutes "good manners" there is a great divergence of opinion. Most people, we fancy, would give the definition of unselfishness or thought for others, but that does not go quite far enough. Surely "manner" includes the way of doing a thing, as well as the action itself. Else how is it that some absolutely selfish people have a charm of manner which makes them universally popular? And what is that indefinable ease and graciousness sometimes met with which makes us treat its possessor as if he were a prince? That charm is felt by all ranks and all classes of society. There are some women who are always waited upon, who are served first, who never hear a rude word, because they are born with a particular manner. This is at variance with the general view of the subject, which is that courtesy is a virtue, and not a quality, that it springs from goodness of heart, and not from nature, that it can and must be acquired by interior cultivation, not exterior. But, nevertheless, it is true. A man who only wishes to be universally courteous, because he sees it pays, can, with patience, teach himself the difficult lesson. We are not affirming that this acquired courtesy will ever be quite so perfect and genuine a thing as the native inborn courtesy which some people possess, only that it will be in no sense behind the courtesy which is arrived at by the desire to avoid giving pain to others. We are apt to pride ourselves on our individual good manners, and a man would far rather be told that he was bad-tempered than rude, and yet, after all, even if we have attained to the standard demanded by our social life, are we so certain that our manners are equally admired by those who do not live exactly in the same social circle as ourselves? There is nothing more curious than the different points of etiquette demanded by different classes.

Some time ago the writer happened to hear a conversation in a railway carriage, which was so evidently intended to be heard that there could be no compunction in listening to it. It ran something in this fashion: "I traveled the other day with two people; ladies, they call theirselves. I shouldn't wonder. Foreigners, they were. May be, French, and they have a dialeck of their own, we know, and they took no more notice of me than if I hadn't been there. If they was the real ladies they thought theirselves they'd have talked affable. I was well purvided with books and such like, but on a journey one expects to be sociable. But," with great triumph, "I let 'em known what I thought of 'em before I left." Her companion answered gravely: "Ay, I traveled wi' some o' that sort the other day, too, and they had books, but we could see they weren't reading, but looking over the edge all the time, and just holding them up to purvent conversation. Bad manners, I calls it."

Surely, in view of this difference of opinion no one can hope to attain to a universally acknowledged excellence. The sins of omission are apparently to count heavily against the unconscious offender; we are not even allowed the time-honored criterion to "do to others as we would be done by," but are to yield up patiently all possibility of self-defense, and submit to the tyranny of any one who chooses to fasten upon us. With fellow-travelers who dread a breath of fresh air, and those who think traveling in a rattling train a suitable occasion for a ceaseless flow of aimless and useless small talk, the prospect of a railway journey looms before us as a new species of modern torture.—London Queen.

"Go way, you fool niggah, dah nebber was sich a big dog," interposed Sam.

"But s'posin' dar was, and his front paws was on de Chelsea sho' and his hind feet on de Boston sho'. Now, s'posin you step on dat dog's tail on de Boston sho' whar'll dat dog bark?"

"In Chelsea, I guess," replied Sam.

DELANO DIARY

--Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—Agent Bolton and operator Burkhart turned the hose onto the depot windows and floors of the G. N. Depot Monday morning and things soon became freshened up.

—People patronizing the new watering fountains are complaining considerably because they are obliged to get out from their vehicles and uncheck and check up their horses. There is no valid reason for not having the fountains as high as they ought to be.

—The Delano Crickets went to Waverly, Wednesday, and beat the Waverly Pickets in a game of base ball. Score 15 to 10. The Crickets think they are getting to the front, they crawled through the Hazelbrush and now have scaled the Picketts. The Picketts are to meet them here next week.

—Rev. J. W. Powell preached at the M. E. Church, on Sunday evening. Their will be evening service every Sunday the balance of this conference year. Epworth League meetings at 6:45 o'clock, preaching at 7:45, Sunday School at 12 M. Every body invited. The Christian Endeavor alternates with the League in leading the meetings.

—F. H. Lindsley had the misfortune to fall into one of the dangerous mantraps left by our street committee, on the corner of Bridge and Third street, on Tuesday afternoon. The village may have a handsome little bill of damages to pay, and it ought to pay it. Another dangerous hole has been made on Epple's corner; that was not needed at all, (the water should run down River street,) and at which ten year old boys would smile. If some one don't get hurt there it is not the fault of the street committee.

—Everybody's scissors get dull; some times it is quite mortifying and provoking. We had an old rusty pair for cutting zinc, and other rough use about the office when a man came in and asked to sharpen our shears; after some hesitation we handed them out. To our astonishment after pulling them through a simple looking little concern a few times he returned them to us sharp, and now we claim to have the sharpest shears in town. If you want your scissors to cut call on Cook & Hutchins, Rockford, Minn. for the "Diamond Shears and Scissors Sharpener.

—The school meeting held Saturday evening was, as usual, rather small and one sided. The polls were opened at 7:05 and closed at 8:00 sharp. A chance for nominations was given, Messrs F. H. Lindsley and C. H. Vorse were nominated, and N. K. Coffin was nominated but declined to run. Tickets already printed, were then produced, bearing the names of Lindsley and Vorse and with blank tickets were passed around. The whole number of votes cast was 34, of which number C H. Vorse received 33, F. H. Lindsley 30, T. J. Catlin 2, N. K. Coffin 1, John Cunningham 1.

—As usual farmers in the woods are not getting their grain cut quite early enough. As soon as grain is ripe enough to mature after cutting, it should be got into shock. Every day that it is left to stand is that much more risk of loosing the summer's work by hail or wind and rain storms. A farmer whose grain is fit to cut the last part of the week, but he concludes to wait until Monday, before beginning is little to be pittied if it takes him a week's hard work to mow what he could have put in the shock in two days the week previous. Some do get caught just about like that and whine awfully.

—The M. E. S. S. teacher's meeting at Mrs. C. H. Green's last night was quite a success.

--Read the notice of Teacher's Examinations to be held this fall, and govern yourself accordingly.

—Very few strawberries, raspberries and fruits of a similar kind have made their appearance in our markets this season.

—The G. N. has complied with the petition of some of our citizens to build a crossing of boards for a walk on River Street.

—The annual S. S. Picnic of the M. E. Church was held, Wednesday, at Lake Huey. It was enjoyed by a large number of people.

--The district school taught by V. Wilder last winter, has been offered to him again. That is a good recommendation for one of Delano's graduates.

—Judging from the number of traveling men on the roads now, it looks as if business must be picking up; otherwise how could firms afford to send them out.

-If the committee on village property should conclude to run the new street grader into the fire house or somewhere else under cover, it might save a few dollars to the village.

--The swine ordinance seems to have been enforced pretty effectually. There is some complaint that the limits covered by the ordinance should be extended to include the entire village.

—The Assessor for the Town of Franklin reported total valuation $62,055, the Board of Equalization raised it to $64,096. He found in the town, horses 648; young horses, 47; yearlings, 66; cows, 1058; sheep, 508; hogs 1142.

—People who are thinking of leaving Minnesota for Oklohoma, would do well to address C. J. Crandall, Arkansas City Ka. Clint is looking after an Indian school down their but says Minnesota is a good enough place for him to live in.

—In the election of F. H. Lindsley, to the membership on the Board of Education a man whose example will not tend to make smokers of the rising generation has been secured. Messrs Gutzwiller and Lindsley can agree on that point.

—Ex-Councilman Coffin says that was no "jig saw" that he was riding; but a "shaper." Perhaps the smart Eagle local news gatherer could get his "bumps" shaped up by the Ex-Councilman, so that he would know there are other machines in town than "jig saws."

--After F. H. Lindsley stepped into the yawning abyss on the corner of Third and Bridge streets, it is said that Street Committee man, Gutzwiller, immediately got a hustle on him and had some fixing done. If the tiling that is on that corner was down about a foot it might be useful as well as ornamental.

—Supplemental Proceedings in the case of George E. Young, Administrator, Estate of William Otto, vs. Ernest Otto; M. A. O'Hair, Referee, was being heard yesterday. J. M. Burlingame, of Minneapolis for prosecution, W. E. Culkin and F. H. Lindsley for defendant. The case is brought to enquire into the property interests of Ernest Otto. Proceedings were not completed and are to be continued on Saturday.

—The Eagle says "The street work done in the village of Delano this year, according to the opinion of many, has cost 75 percent more than it should have cost." With I. Gutzwiller on the village committe on streets what more could be expected. Didn't he keep up his reputation for fooling away other people's funds whenever oportunity presented. He is a great financier for I. Gutzwiller, but looses few opportunities to slur others.

—A couple of trees, old standbys, took a notion recently to rest. One in the alley, near H. Wilder's residence fell, while the family was at dinner; had it come down so unexpectedly at some time when the children with the neighbors children were at play beneath its shade, a fearful accident would have been the consequence. Another tree in William Gross's pasture fell Saturday night and caught one of his cows in such a manner as to injure her beyond recovery; she had to be killed to relieve her of her suffering.

—We don't consider it any credit to the School District or to the Board of Education that two members of the Board of Education came to school meeting last Saturday evening, and deliberately marched in and seated themselves in one of the rooms for small scholars, where ladies were present, deliberately smoking, one a corn cob pipe, the other a cigar. It may be considered by some out of taste to mention this matter put it is surely as polite and elevating to mention such discrepancies in public officals, as it is for the officals to violate the commonest laws of politeness and good breeding.

—The horse market seems to be on the decline right along, with no signs of improvement. We understand that one day last week a couple of our business men who are pretty good "hoss traders" found themselves each the possessor of an extra horse, and hitched them together making a good sized young team, and hied themselves out to a farm where oxen were used, and were then engaged in reaping grain. The horse jockeys offered to hitch the horses onto the reaper and let the man try them until he was satisfied, and trade even for his oxen; but it was no go; the farmer preferred to drive oxen yet awhile.

County Cullings.

The Ninth Annual Convention of the W. C. T. U. of Wright County will be held at the M. E. Church, in Buffalo. Tuesday July 30. A good programme has been prepared and a large attendance is expected.

The June term of District Court at Buffalo was one of the most expensive for years. Up to Tuesday there had been paid out on this account the large sum of $2,475.80. It is expected the figures will at least reach $25,000 for the term.

Attorney General Childs has been asked, by Stillwater parties, to decide, as to whether a paper that does not print its regular issue on its regular publication day when that day falls on a holiday can be considered a legal paper or not, to publish legal advertisements. The Delano Eagle published its 4th of July edition on Wednesday, the 3d, and will, of course, be on the ragged edge until this question is settled.

While at the county seat, Tuesday we picked up a few pointers, political and otherwise for our readers: Republican politicians generally seemed opposed to the pronounced stand in favor of free silver, taken by their newly elected Congressman, Mr. Towne. But young Mr. Towne don't appear to think that the Wright county politicians amount to much anyway and keeps right on in the even tenor of his silver ways. One astute republican said he didn't think Mr. Towne would hurt anything in Congress next term anyway. Some leaders of the G. O. P. are still quoting from the New York Tribune, as authority, though its famous editor, Horace Greeley has been dead these many years. They claim that the Tribune says that the gold dollar, is worth without the alloy, a dollar in gold anywhere! yankees ain't built that way. They are not in the habit of giving a man all that belongs to him and then adding 1-10 of alloy of something to make the pile bigger. They prefer to alloy first, then do the measuring; if anything is to be made by alloying they take that themselves.

Fall Examinations.

Teacher's fall examinations will be held as follows:

Howard Lake and Monticello, Aug. 23 and 24
Buffalo and Delano, Aug. 30, and 31.
Annandale, Oct. 25, and 26,

J. F. LEE,
Co. Supt. of Schools.

| St. Michaels Village, | 15,035 |
| Waverly Village, - | 39,452 |
| Total Valuation, | $1,227,480 |

Howard Lake, Cokato and Monticello villages and the Town Franklin seem to have more personal property than does Delano.

Olmstead county is excited over the spread of the cattle disease lumpy jaw, which is infesting the herds in that county extensively. The disease is contagious and cattle having it are unfit for food.—Litchfield Independent.

The financial debate between Harvey, representing the free coinage of silver men, and Horr, representing the gold standard people, is now on in Chicago, and is attracting wide attention. Next week we hope to be able to give the ten day debate nearly complete. So far Harvey has been more than a match for the famed debator from Michigan.—Clearwater News.

The St. Cloud Journal-Press says it is in favor of bimetallism under such restrictions and under such provisions as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, but does not believe the United States can establish such restrictions and provisions. It is very interesting to know that the Journal-Press is in favor of what it deems to be impossible. That is the kind of bimetallism that all the gold stanard men believe in.--Brainerd Journal.

DO THEY MISS ME AT HOME.

Do they miss me at home—do they miss me?
'Twould be an assurance most dear
To know at this moment some loved ones
Were saying: "I wish he were here?"
To feel that the group at the fireside
Were thinking of me as I roam;
Oh, yes, 'twould be joy beyond measure
To know that they missed me at home.

When twilight approaches, the season
That ever is sacred to song,
Does someone repeat my name over,
And sigh that I tarry so long?
And is there a chord in the music
That's missed when my voice is away,
And a chord in each heart that awaketh
Regret at my wearison stay?

Do they set me a chair near the table,
When evenings home pleasures are nigh,
When the candles are lit in the parlor,
And the stars in the calm azure sky?
And when the "good nights" are repeated,
And all lay them down to their sleep,
Do they think of the absent, and waft me
A whispered "good night" while they sleep?

Do they miss me at home—do they miss me
At morning, at noon or at night?
And lingers one gloomy shade round them,
That only my presence can light?
Are joys less invitingly we'come,
And pleasures less hale than before
Because one is missed from the circle,
Because I am with them no more?

FROM the Moorhead News we learn that although over a hundred votes were cast at the recent school meeting, two men were declared elected who received less than half the votes of the meeting; it didn't give satisfaction. We shouldn't think it would; people are used to having school officers elected by a majority of the votes cast.

EDITOR JOUBERT, of the Litchfield News-Ledger has been studying cooking, lately, and has come to the conclusion that "we may with our frying-pans and soup-kettles, wage a mighty war against intemperance, for seldom is a well fed man a drunkard." He claims that a home where things are neat and clean and the cooking nicely and well done don't often contain drunkards. Send some of your cook-books to Delano for distribution Mr. Joubert.

THE much talked of debate on the financial question betweed Mr. Horr, ex-Congressman from Michigan, and W. H. Harvey, editor of "Coin," in Chicago has been terminated. The longer it was drawn out the less interest seemed to be taken in it. We don't think the book to be published containing both arguments will sell for as much as has the previous publications of Mr. Harvey, everybody has kept a kind of run of the arguments as they appeared in the papers and the general verdict from what has appeared seems to be that Mr. Horr relied to much on his ability to poke fun, and not enough on the production of solid facts and substantial arguments to win his case, and played a loosing game from the first.

IT seems kind of strange to hear leading protectionists arguing against free silver because it would depreciate our silver money so that we could not buy with it in other countries! They say it might be made equal with gold for home use, but when we wished to buy something from other countries they would refuse our silver! and we could not trade! Isn't that just the state of affairs they have been working for, for years? Haven't they voted and asked us to vote to have such high protective laws that our people would be obliged to use things made in this country, only? If it is desirable that Americans live wholly within themselves; buy nothing from abroad, and free silver will bring about this end as they say it will, why do they so strenuously object to free silver? Isn't protection, because other nations wan't take our money as effectual, and as good as it is by protective laws alone?

The Fourth Hospital for Insane.

Preparations are being made to select a location for a fourth hospital for the insane of the state. An appropriation of $15,000, for purchasing a sight was made by the legislature, and a committee appointed to decide on the best location, not too far away from the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis. The committee is to meet in August to determine where the future home of hundreds of unfortunate people shall be for the balance of their lives. A great responsibility rests with the committee; they should weigh the pros and cons for each locality as they would in selecting future homes for themselves and families. This institution is to stand for, no one can tell how long, and to have as inmates people who now, some of them, are supposed to possess more than average intelligence; our friends and neighbors. The state pays for a home for them; they deserve a good healthy, pleasant locality in which to live. A few dollars difference in the purchase price should cut no figure, as deciding between a fit place for a home and one that is unfit.

Delano has entered the list of applicants for the location. Delano is in one of the healthiest and most atractive, and productive parts of the state, an hours ride from Minneapolis, on two lines of R. R. only four miles apart, the G. N. and the Soo line. The Crow river drains the country. Beautiful natural groves can be found on lands bought here. Delano presents as fine natural advantages as any place in the country for homes. No better sight can be found for such an institution; and especially if the cottage plan is to be adopted.

Keep in the Middle of the Road.

There comes the report from Iowa that the Democrats there are talking of uniting with the Populists, and the observation is made that, in that event, "the campaign will be a lively one." From Alabama comes word that the notorious Kolb is opposed to fusion with the Republicans this time, the efforts of Senator Hoar and the Boston Home Market club to raise funds to aid his fusion last year not having been satisfactory to him. In North Carolina the Republicans and Populists formed a perfectly natural union and divided the two United States senatorships between them. In Kansas there was a coalition of the Democrats and Populists. And so it goes. There is always, in every party, a contingent of "practical" men, as they delight to term themselves, who regard the possession of the offices as the all-in-all of party purposes. The principles of the party to such are only ornamental appendages, a sort of distinguishing badge, to be worn on state occasions and put away when work begins. Where the party is in the minority, these fall readily into any scheme that promises the offices as a reward, and unite easily with either, regardless of their professed principles.

Usually they are in control of the party machinery and thus able to give the party an apparent direction, making it responsible for their act of prostitution. But, while covering the party with the bad odor of their deal, they are never able to control the members; and that always large and influential portion that set principle above expediency, that regard adherence to principle as the best, the only true expediency, refuse to be traded off. The result is demoralization; and if success comes, it is never more than temporary, while the disorganization in the party and the distrust outside of it are permanent. Such has ever been the experience of the Democratic party, and, in the thirty years just behind it, it has had frequent illustrations of its truth. The Democrats of Iowa may well ponder the lessons of that experience and especially those of their own. Democratic leaders of the "practical" sort might learn from them the real expediency of keeping to the middle of the Democratic road, never diverging into any of the alluring side paths that promise short cuts to victory.

The history of all parties, and especially of ours, shows that they are never so strong and never so successful as when they adhere with the greatest fidelity to their basic principles; and that they are never so weak as when, consulting expediency, they make sacrifice of principle for hope of immediate profit: There has never been a time in the history of the Democratic party that it was not triumphant when it was most thoroughly and earnestly Democratic. When it went to the people advocating Democratic policies, based on immutable democratic principles of government, it won. When in the execution of the commission given it to put those policies in force, it has proven untrue, it has been cast out. Adventitious circumstances such as the panic of 1837, have temporarily overthrown it, and it is possible that the panic of 1893 would have been sufficient to defeat it had there been no recreancy to principle in the Fifty third Congress, but even if that were so, there is no question that the party would be in better shape today had that Congress obeyed the injunction of the majority, and steadfastly adhered to the revenue idea in framing its policy. There is no instance on record where the fusion of opposing parties has brought permanent advantage to either. There is no exception to the rule that such policy is destructive of organization and discipline as well as a mockery of principle. It is immoral, and it does not pay. All parties should have learned that lesson by this time. —St. Paul Globe.

English or no Mass.

Madison, Wis., July 28.—(Special)—That a change has come over the Catholic church of this state since the memorable Bennett law campaign was shown by the action of Bishop Messmer, the president of the Catholic summer school, in refusing to have the services accompanying the saying of the pontifical high mass today said in German. He declared that the service must be in English, if held at all.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 28, 1895.

Secretary Carlisle told the Louisiana Senators and Representative Meyer, who called to see him to protest against the right of the Comptroller to decide whether the money appropriated by Congress to pay sugar bounties should be withheld, that he had no authority over the Comptroller, not even the power of removal which is vested in the President alone.

The Louisians argued that the Comptroller had no legal authority to question the constitutionality of an act of Congress; that he was merely charged with the construction of the laws as he found them, and that if he had the power claimed he would be paramount to Congress. Secretary Carlisle said it was true that the Comptroller might by the arbitrary exercise of his authority greatly embarrass the government, but he could see no present remedy. Congress had conferred this great authority upon the Comptroller, and the Secretary of the Treasury had no right to question his acts. The President, of course, could remove a Comptroller, but he could not direct or review his acts. There seems little doubt that Comptroller Bowler has the law on his side, although the right to construe the constitutionality of acts of Congress appropriating money has not been exercised by a Comptroller for years. He says he is only doing his duty, in view of the decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, that the sugar bounty law was unconstitutional, in asking that arguments be presented showing the constitutionality of the act of the last Congress appropriating money for sugar bounties before he approves the payment of any money under that act. August 7 has been set for the hearing of the arguments, and, as more than $5,000,000 is at stake an imposing array of legal talent is expected to take part.

The secret is out. Mr. Benjamin Harrison need not pretend that he is not an out and out candidate for that nomination any longer. There are people in Washington who have seen letters from Col. John C. New directing how certain wires should be pulled in order to increase Mr. Harrison's chances. Besides, it has leaked out that a near relative of "Lige" Halford, who used to be Mr. Harrison's private Secretary, is quietly running a Harrison literary bureau in Washington. It is ridiculous to say that these things are being done without the knowledge or consent of Mr. Harrison. Col. New managed his last canvass and is as near to being in his confidence as he ever allows anybody to get. Men who are known to be working for Harrison are not the sort to be wasting their time without an explicit understanding. Among these men are ex-Senator Spooner, of Wis.; "Long" Jones, of Ill.; ex-Senator Sewell, of N. J., and Senator Elkins, of W. Va. Mr. Harrison wants that nomination and he is going to do his level best to get it.

In response to requests from the U. S. Consul at Panama and the New York officers of the Panama railroad Secretary Herbert has ordered a ship to Panama. There are two sources from which trouble is feared. There is a labor strike now on hand, and Ecuador is said to be about to invade Colombia. We have a treaty with Colombia which gives the United States the right to maintain free communication over the Panama railroad whenever Columbia fails to do so. Of course Secretary Herbert's instructions have not been made public, but it is almost certain that they include keeping of the Panama railroad open, as well as protecting American interests in general.

Ex-Senator Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, now Railroar Commissioner, says he was misrepresented by rhe Southern paper which quoted him as stating that he had personal knowledge of President Cleveland's intention to be a candidate for a third term. Speaking of this matter Gen. Hampton said: "I believe I did say that if the different parties took to splitting up and a half dozen candidates took the field a lot of conservative gold bug democrats would want to run President Cleveland for a third term and that a big per cent among republicans would heartily join them. As a matter of fact, I haven't the slightest reason for believing from anything President Cleveland ever said or did that he is or will be a candidate for a third term. On the other hand I have no idea that he is thinking about it or would consent to run for another nomination." This whole third term flurry, which has lately taken on new life, is based upon misrepresentations, which in most cases have been intentionally made by enemies of President Cleveland, and which have been spread and added to by editors who find that a more congenial subject than a discussion of the live issues of the day. While all things are possible, there is not the slightest probability that President Cleveland's name will go before the next democratic National convention, either with or without his consent.

The Boy on the Farm.

When an able-bodied young man, with no strong bent in other directions, has a distaste for farm life, it must be owing to one or both of two things, if his father is a successful farmer; either the home life is dry, narrow, uninteresting—few books, little company, no amusements, cheap clothing, ugly furniture—the main object of living being to get and save money; or the young man is so unfortunate as to be treated by his father as though he were still a child, incapable of thinking or acting for himself, who ought to be grateful for the chance of doing a man's work for his board. The average young man wants the chance to earn money and the privilege of doing what he pleases with the money after it is earned. Give him the opportunity to do this on the farm, with a pleasant home, and nine times out of ten, I believe that he will appreciate the advantages of farm life. He will, for the first time, perhaps, really have them to appreciate.

If a man is selfish and dictatorial, unsympathetic, wholly forgetful of his own younger days, it would be strange, indeed, if his children grew up with much affection for their home or their fathers occupation. I knew a man, of a different stamp, who had four boys. He thought a great deal of them, loved to have them with him, was interested in their pursuits, and anxious that they should be successful. He treated them, even when they were very small, as though they were rational beings. He expected them to work, trusted them with responsibilities, and sometimes deferred to their judgement. As a natural consequence, they thought everything of their father, and were never so happy as when they could be with him helping him. They were regular little workers, wanting to do everything he did, proud of pleasing him, interested in all farming operations, bright, wide-awake, observant, and full of life. It seems to me that this is the way to treat a boy on the farm—unselfishly, wisely, sympathetically. Not trying to see how much work can be got out of him for nothing before he is 21, but how he can best be helped and guided to become independent, useful, successful and happy.—Garden Lore.

The much advertised Horr-Harvey silver debate does not create the excitement that its managers hoped for, and the whole affair appears to be falling very flat.—Sherburne County Times.

A FARMER near Norfolk is raising 400 acres of potatoes and is offering to contract all anyone wants at 25 cents a bushel. He expects to have 10,000 bushels.—Weeping Water, (Neb.,) Republican.

The eyes of the world for the past week have been on Chicago, watching the course of the Harvey-Horr debate on the financial question. So far the all absorbing question has not been settled. If Mr. Horr would confine himself to facts and not so much to ridicule, the people would have more confidence in the debate.—Wabasha Democrat.

There was no debate between Horr and Harvey today, Mr. Horr, so it is reported, asking for time to recuperate. He is evidently outclassed in this contest, and tries to make up his deficiencies by sarcasm, witty sallies, abuse and wandering from the subject, while Harvey keeps right on following closely the propositions as laid down and giving indisputable facts and sound, clear-cut, respectful and convincing argument, all in a cool-headed manner.—Moorhead News.

We invoke the aid of all sincere, honest and patriotic men, to help lift the weight that has so long rested upon the shoulders of the yeomanry of America, filling their minds with discouragement and in some cases with despair, and clouding their future prospects and that of their posterity:

"God give us men: a time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands,
Men whom the lusts of office do not kill,
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who possess opinions and a will,
Men who have honor, and who will not lie."

TOBACCO is now grown in forty-two states and territories, but nearly half the crop comes from Kentucky, Virginia, Ohio, North Carolina, Tennessee, Pennsylvania and Connecticut.

THE London News dates the progress of human rights in all nations from that "shot heard round the world" which was fired by the American farmers at the outbreak of our revolution.

GOV. MORTON, of New York, has contributed a pen to a collection that is being gathered at the home of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt of Boston. The pens in this collection have all been used by governors of states in signing temperance education laws.

NOW THAT Napoleon has been dead nearly three-quarters of a century the Norwegians have concluded that it is about time to break the knot which the great Corsican tied, and lovers of democracy are gladdened by the prospect of a new republic looming up in the old world.

THE St. Louis Republic proclaims that corn will be king again this year, and that the aggregate production in the United States will be 2,300,000,000 bushels, almost double the crop of last year These estimates are based on acreage and condition as given in the last government report.

AND now the Englishwoman is discussing the propriety of conferring knighthood and other distinctions of title on women since they are at last permitted to enter unopposed into the pursuits formerly monopolized by men. The new woman is not disposed to stand any nonsense—she wants it all.

SHAKESPEARE'S "Seven Ages," with a little paraphrasing, has been found to apply to the modern craze, the bicycle. The first lines are made to read in this way:

—" All the world's a road,
And all the men and women merely riders.
They have their tandems and their safeties,
And one man in his time rides many ways
As suits his seven ages."

SENORA DI COUSINO, a Chilian lady of mature age and with an income of $200,000,000 a year, is about to visit this country. She will first land in New York, where, compared with her, the multi-millionaires are little better than paupers. She is a widow of simple tastes and learned only on the subject of mines and ranches—the source of her fabulous wealth.

THE venerable John Ruskin was asked recently whether parents ought to leave fortunes to their children and tersely replied: "When they are strong throw them out of the nest as the bird does. But let the nest always be open to them." It has been said of Ruskin that of late he has been losing his faculties. On the other hand he seems to have preserved them remarkably.

A DEATH from unusual circumstances is reported from Delaware county, N. Y. The other night a farmer dreamed that he was bitten by a dog. In his sleep he kicked at the canine, and his foot went through a window. The glass cut him and blood poisoning did the rest. The moral of the story, if moral there is, is that one either should avoid the stuff that dreams are made of, or should be careful not to fall asleep within kicking distance of a pane of glass.

MRS. NELSON YOUNG, of Palm Beach, Fla., who is an expert bicyclist, recently appeared in a bloomer costume and was the admiration of everyone except Mr. A. G. McDonald, who said no modest woman would appear in such a garb. When Mrs. Young heard of the remark she confronted McDonald with a pistol, which she handled so carelessly that he made an apology and signed a card of retraction for publication. There is no use in waiting for the coming woman. She has come.

DR. J. P. GIBBONS of Syracuse, N. Y., has made an extraordinary charge as to the recent electrical executions at Auburn, in that state. He says that negroes Johnson and Taylor were not killed by the first application of the current. He affirms that Taylor came to himself sufficiently to walk and talk and that his life was extinguished with drugs before the current was applied the second time. As to Johnson, the doctor was allowed to experiment upon him and produced respiration by artificial means. Then the warden had the switch turned on again and he was killed.

THE present year is likely to have an unusual record of great marine disasters, as will be seen by the following list of wrecked steamers thus far: Port Nictheroy, Rio Janeiro harbor, 120; Nordsee, North sea, 25; Initrahull, English coast, 26; Prescott, at sea, 23; Chicora, Lake Michican, 26; Elbe, North sea, 332; Terciera, Rio Janeiro habor, 100; Kingdon, at sea, 40; Reina Regente, Algerian coast, 425; Marie, English coast, 20; Billiton, at sea, 20; Gravina, at sea, 168; Dom Pedro, Spanish coast, 103; Colima, Mexican coast, 188; Washtenaw, at sea, 30; Maria P., Gulf of Genoa, 148.

A GIRL in a neighboring state asked about her idea of marriage said, calmly: "Well, I don't know if I would marry for money alone, but if a man had plenty of money, allied to a sweet disposition, and a mustache that curled at both ends, and his father was rich, and his mother and sisters aristocratic, and he wanted to marry me, and he would promise to let me have my own way in everything, and keep me liberally supplied with money, was liberal about diamonds, also about the milliner, never grumbling, and I really and truly loved him, I shouldn't consider marriage a drawback."

SECRETARY CARLISLE directed that the money paid into the treasury on account of the income tax be refunded to the persons and corporations respectively entitled thereto upon the filing of the refunding claims.

IN his annual report the commissioner of internal revenue for the fiscal year ended June 30 says the total receipts from all sources for the year were $143,245,977, a decrease of $3,922,471 as compared with 1894.

HARVEY AND HORR.

The Debate in Chicago Over the Silver Question.

"Coin's Financial School" Defended by Its Author—A New York Financier Attacks Every Position Taken Therein—A Synopsis.

Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.

CHICAGO, July 27.—At the opening of the Horr-Harvey silver debate Thursday it was announced that but two more sessions would be held. And for this reason the daily bouts would be somewhat lengthened in order to admit of the delivery of the number of words originally agreed upon. The debate Thursday was marked by a more than usually sharp encounter between the two contestants. Mr. Horr called his opponent's attention to a statement which he had made in his criticisms upon Senator Morrill, wherein he stated that the silver dollars of 412½ grains were largely coined previous to the demonetization of silver in 1873 and after the passage of the law of 1853, making subsidiary coinage of less value than its face. Therefore he inferred that Senator Morrill was mistaken in stating that none of the 412½ dollars had been coined from silver mined in this country. Mr. Harvey said that the old dollars of 412½ grains were coined for the people of Nevada and California, notwithstanding that at that time the bullion was worth more uncoined than coined. Mr. Horr then denied that these dollars were coined from silver mined in this country and sent to the mint for that purpose. Congress had provided that foreign coin should be received by the government at a certain fixed value, and further that such coins should not again put into circulation but should be recoined at the mint. The report of the director of the mint showed that over $5,000,000 in silver had thus accumulated, having been found in the gold during the process of assaying it.

At this point Harvey challenged Horr's statement, saying that he had not brought his authorities with him, and therefore his arguments were entitled to no standing in debate. He then handed Mr. Horr a statement of the director of the mint, which he said reported that during the year 1870, 412,462 silver dollars had been coined at Carson City. Mr. Harvey again called his opponent to task for not confining his remarks to the order of debate originally agreed upon, and said that he would not be diverted from this order. He then entered upon a discussion of primary and credit money, saying that an overissue of credit money caused a drain upon the primary money for redemption purposes. An example of this had just been witnessed in this country in the issue of bonds by the present administration for the purpose of maintaining the gold reserve.

Mr. Harvey said he had received a letter within the last few days from a large New York manufacturer in which the writer stated that all the money the bank sent him to pay off his men was in silver certificates. The run on the United States treasury must continue till the credit money outstanding, estimated at $1,000,000,000, was reduced to the quantity of gold in this country, which was variously estimated at from $400,000,000 to $600,000,000, or the stock of primary money was increased. To bring order out of confusion the first necessary step was to build up the stock of primary money. All credit money rested on primary money, and if the gold standard was adhered to the people must look to gold alone to sustain its credit. Each government gold loan was a step towards national bankruptcy, temporarily restoring confidence, but finally resulting in an increased demand for gold. To correct this system the remonetization of silver was necessary. Every moment's delay endangered the safety of the republic.

Mr. Horr took his opponent to task for making a mistake in his figures regarding the amount of silver dollars coined in 1870 at the Carson City mint and asserted that the mint report from which the silver champion had quoted sustained Mr. Horr's proposition that not any of the silver produced in this country and sold by silver owners, or taken to the mint for coinage, was embraced in that money which Mr. Harvey said was coined after 1853. The mint report showed that from 1870 to 1874, in the mint of Carson City, there were only coined 19,288 of the old silver dollars. The report showed they were coined from the silver accumulated in assaying the gold taken to that mint.

Mr. Horr added: Up to this moment Mr. Harvey has not said one word upon the real question in debate. He spent hours to prove that the law of 1873 was conceived in sin and brought forth iniquity. I gave a short, succinct history of the bill and the steps taken in its passage. He has not controverted a single statement of mine. He has nowhere proven any act of bribery or the influence of money in a single step taken during the progress of the bill through congress. He or no one else ever will, because there was none. He has now printed long tables to prove that when the entire world, except England, was attempting to control the price of silver by legislation, they succeeded in keeping the legal price within five cents on the dollar of the market or commercial price, and that generally the variation between the market and the legal price was only about two points. I have virtually shown—and he virtually admits, at least he has nowhere denied it—that a variation of one-quarter of one point has thus far been sufficient to drive the dearer metal from every country in the world. My proposition is that gold has remained nearly stationary in price since 1873 and that silver has fallen in price in accordance with the great law of supply and demand, and that the cheapened processes of production, with the increase of the supply, has driven down the price of silver.

Mr. Harvey—I want to say to Mr. Horr, while disputing all that he has said, the silver derived from gold in refining gold at the mints was not coined into dollars, but was coined into fractional silver. When he says that the government was willing to lose that 2 or 3 per cent. premium he says that the government was willing to do something that the individual was not. The country needs $34,800,000,000 to meet the normal demand for money. It needs it just as it needs a normal supply of wheat. For each dollar in existence we are paying the banks interest on two dollars. This is the way the banks work up the actual volume in existence to the normal volume. With $1,600,000,000 in existence, the people are using it and paying interest on $3,300,000,000 additional. This interest varies from 5 to 12 per cent. The banks are interested in holding down the volume of money and supplying the remainder needed with their credit system. They take the quantity of money in existence and stretch it like a piece of rubber. And they sometimes let loose of their end. It is used to mould public opinion in their interest. It can be truthfully said that all money in circulation represents borrowed money. It is human nature, known to all men, that most debtors are moral cowards. Money is the lash they are afraid of and the money lenders hold the whip hand.

Mr. Horr—Whenever silver mining costs two dollars an ounce, men who are in it paying their expenses and can only sell it for sixty cents will quit that business the world over. The mines that are mining silver at less than sixty cents will keep right on in the business. Now, Mr. Harvey, the fact that these mines have been running since 1879, according to your own statement, when the full effects of demonitization took place, with silver going down and down, if the production is increased from year to year, that of itself proves, and no man can gainsay it, that they are still making money at the price, or they would not stay in that business. They could not. Hence this effort of Mr. Harvey is to get $1.29 out of the entire people of the United States for an article that costs the men who are producing it less than sixty cents an ounce. Was there ever such class legislation attempted in any country, to compel the people to pay for a thing three times as much as it costs to produce it? The men who own mines and those who owe sums of money in excess of the money due them may be benefited by this cheap money scheme, but the rest of the people will receive nothing but injury.

Mr. Harvey—What Mr. Horr has said about the cost of producing silver he could have said with a great deal more force about the cost of producing gold. Gold, dollar for dollar, costs a great deal less than silver to mine. Over 50 per cent. of all the silver produced comes from prospects where men are trying to make mines, mines that are not paying in either gold or silver, or both, and they are shipping that to get back what they can. There are only three or four silver mines left in the United States that are paying, and they are running precariously. Why? Because all mines are uneven and uncertain and may be lost in a week from now. The shylocks of old loaned their own money. The shylocks of to-day have a system by which they loan other people's money. They are defending that system.

Saturday.

CHICAGO, July 30.—There was an attendance of between seventy-five and 100 listeners Saturday when Mr. Horr inaugurated the next to the last session of the great silver debate. Mr. Horr opened by quoting a report of the finance committee of the United States senate for the purpose of showing that gold had not appreciated since 1873 and challenged his opponent's sincerity in basing his arguments in this matter upon Sauerbeck's tables, which are compiled by an Englishman and based upon English values. In his reply to these charges Mr. Harvey scored one of the hardest hits that has yet been placed to his credit. He produced an article written by Mr Horr in answer to a correspondent which had appeared in the weekly and monthly editions of the New York Tribune in which Mr. Horr scoffed at the idea which he has advanced in the present debate that human labor formed a trustworthy standard of value. Mr. Horr's reply to the correspondent, as quoted by Mr. Harvey, concluded with the words: "Your system seems so absurd that I can hardly treat it soberly."

In reply to the charge that he had unfairly based his arguments upon a foreign table, Mr. Harvey produced a comparative statement that his argument would have been even more forcibly emphasized by the Aldrich report to the United States senate, and further stated that his selection of Sauerbeck's figures was based upon his belief and the generally accepted opinion that they were more authoritative.

Mr. Horr accused his opponent of being tricky in quoting one sentence from the article which he had written for the New York Tribune, and assuming that it showed the gist of the whole article. What he said in reference to the man's theories being ridiculous did not relate to his measure of value at all. It was his attempt to substitute a paper dollar based on nothing with which to do the business of the country.

Saturday's debate was full of byplay, and there was no little wit and sharp retort that kept the audience in excellent humor. In a nutshell the arguments of Saturday were along these lines:

Claimed by Mr. Harvey—That panics are due to our system of bank credits; that supply and demand, not cost of production, fix prices; that the relative value of the dollar now is greater than in 1865; that there is a constant increase in debtors, in tenants, in homicides, insanity, suicide and crime; that, in short, the logical outcome of the tendency of present events must be the substitution of a monarchy for the present republic.

Claimed by Mr. Horr—That the volume of currency in circulation is not closely related to the volume of business; that there is no such thing as an unlimited demand for anything in the world, not even of money; that there are other uses for money than as a medium of paying debts; that the panic of 1893 was caused by a fear that this country might return to a silver basis; that the business of the country does not depend upon the per capita of the circulating medium; that the debt of the country is decreasing; that eleven items in Mr. Harvey's table of debts are millions of dollars wrong in the aggregate and wholly misleading.

At the close of the day's session Mr. Harvey presented Mr. Horr with a silver dollar of 1799, as a souvenir of the debate. "In the early days of the debate," said Mr. Harvey, "you claimed the silver dollar was never the sole unit or standard of value. I hereby present you with a silver dollar coined in 1799, upon the rim of which, in place of the customary milling, is stamped by the government, these words: 'One dollar or unit, hundred cents.' Mr. Horr accepted the dollar, and announced he would have a hole bored into its middle and then hang it with a string about the neck of a granddaughter born the first day of the debate.

Monday, the Closing Session.

CHICAGO, July 31.—The Horr-Harvey silver debate came to an end Monday. Every seat in the art gallery of the Illinois club was occupied when time was called for the closing session of the great war of words, and the walls were lined with listeners eager to catch the closing remarks of the contestants.

Twenty-four hours in all have been consumed in the debate which ran through eight days, and 145,000 words in all were spoken, according to the original agreement. The two gentlemen still have 2,500 words each in which to close. This is to be submitted, however, in manuscript any time within seven days to be inserted in the book which is to be published.

Resolutions were passed thanking the Illinois club for the use of their house, and expressing appreciation of all that had been done by various ladies and gentlemen to assist in the carrying on of the debate. A resolution was also passed thanking Messrs. Horr and Harvey for the mass of information with which they have presented the public since the debate began. Then the closing arguments were commenced.

Mr. Horr led with the sweeping assertion that in the few cases in which the figures citied by Mr. Harvey were correct they had tended to weaken his own argument. He then referred to Mr. Harvey's statement, which the latter had said was based upon the authority of Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor, to the effect that there were between 2,000,000 and 4,000,000 unemployed men in the country. In refutation of these figures, he produced a telegram from Mr. Wright expressly disclaiming them.

The effect of this shot was spoiled, however, by Mr. Harvey's explanation that these were the only figures that he had used in his book that had not been verified, and that immediately after the appearance of the first edition he had written to Mr. Wright and upon receipt of his reply had erased the incorrect data from the stereotype plates of the book. After this temporary digression, the silver champion expressed his obligations to every one who had assisted him in the debate, from the judge and referee to his fair stenographer, and then resumed the thread of his argument by producing a printed table showing the amounts of silver coined annually from 1792 to 1873, for the purpose of demonstrating the falsity of the statement made by the monometallists that, for the first fifty years of the present century the United States was on a silver basis, and on a gold basis from 1863 to 1873.

The statement, he said, that gold did not seek the mints for the first fifty years, and that silver did not seek the mints for the last thirty years prior to 1873, is not true. He quoted from the United States coinage laws, appendix of 1894. The stock of gold is there given as $3,901,900,000; the stock of silver, $3,931,300,000. On account of the great use of gold in the arts he maintained that there was not enough of the yellow metal to answer the needs of money.

Mr. Horr maintained his previous statements that no nation alone can establish the old ratio of 16 to 1, and he did not believe that Mr. Harvey thinks any one nation can do it. Nations by their laws do not fix the value of things. They cannot do it if they try. The actual value of the two metals at the present time is wide apart. The ratio of 16 to 1 is today a thing of the past. Always from the earliest foundation of society the relative value between gold and silver has been fixed by the people of the world, and not by legislation. Mr. Harvey and I agree that the free coinage of silver will decrease the measure of value used here in this country. The burden of his whole talk in this debate is that we ought to have a cheaper measure; that the unit is worth too much. So now we agree that it will change the measure. Mr. Harvey says that is what ought to be done because, he says, the whole world is in debt and our country is on the brink of ruin because the present dollar is too valuable. That is a position in which I differ from him. The debts of the day have all been contracted with the gold dollar as the measure, and to relieve the payment of them in any way by a trick of this kind is repudiation.

Mr. Harvey continued his quotations from statistics in relation to the world's supply of gold and the bearing the arts had toward it. The more costly either gold or silver becomes, he said, the greater the demand among the rich for it for use as ornaments. Where the dearer is used exclusively for primary money it is the one that is hoarded. When gold and silver were both used as money in their own right silver was hoarded by the plain people and was brought forth to serve them in time of need. Gold is principally hoarded by the rich to serve a purpose in bulling the money market. Hoarding of silver by the people was beneficial: hoarding of gold is an injury. The cause of hoarding in the two instances is different. In the first instance it is to serve a natural law providing for the future: in the second instance it is a commercial motive affecting injuriously the community. This is one of the reasons why silver has always proved the more stable money.

Mr. Horr referred to Mr. Harvey's habit of comparing size as having something to do with value, and stated that the amount of gold in the world all put in a cube hasn't anything to do with how much it is worth. He accused Harvey of comparing things that are not alike with each other, and when a man does that, he said, he is always in the wrong. Now, there is no disguising the issue between us. It is simply this: Can we benefit the people of this republic now by making a dollar mean about half as much as it now means? Can we benefit them by making it seem any considerable amount less than it now is by making it actually less in value? We may disguise it as much as we will, the free coinage of silver on a ratio of 16 to 1 means silver monometallism.

Mr. Harvey maintained that there will be a commercial parity between gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, if the law is passed putting both metals on an equal footing at that ratio. What he meant by an equal footing is that both shall have the right to enter the mints free to be coined into money with 23.22 grains of pure gold to be a dollar and 371¼ grains of pure silver to be a dollar. The money made from both metals to be full legal tender money in the payment of all debts, and the debtor to have the right to pay in either metal. The supply of silver is limited. When a great nation like this, whose normal capacity for the absorption of money in the transaction of its normal business is not far from $4,000,000,000, opens its mines to silver it fixes the price of silver the world over. So long as the supply of silver is limited, as it is now, no one will part with it for any less than they can get for it in the United States. Mr. Horr will say to this: "The government does not buy the silver under free coinage. It stamps it and hands it back to the owner worth no more than when he brought it to the mint." What the government has done is this: It has given to silver a new use, and the use is what gives to it its value.

Mr. Horr closed the debate with an eloquent peroration on the revival of business; of the appeal of Cuba against oppression; of the distressing situation of the South American republics, and said: "We are fighting the battle of liberty for the world. The result of your verdict upon this momentous question will be world wide. It will convey words of cheer and stimulate the nerves of free men in every land."

TONE OF TRADE.

It Continues to Be of a Most Satisfactory Quality.

NEW YORK, July 29.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"It is not the season for the tide of business to rise, but there is perceived scarcely any shrinkage except that which comes naturally with mid-summer heat. Lateness of spring trade threw heavy settlements into the second week of July, and clearing house payments are now almost a quarter smaller than in that week, but are 21.1 larger than last year, and only 6.0 per cent. smaller than in the same week of 1892. The volume of new business is small compared with recent months, but large enough to encourage more opening of long-closed works, and more advances in returns to labor. Important strikes show that the advance is not enough for some, but seem not more threatening than a week ago. The small shipments of gold count for nothing, and money markets are undisturbed.

"Accounts of shrinkage in the yield of wheat come both from Pacific states and from the Dakotas. It would be a strange and unnatural July without such reports, and yet they have weight enough this year to lead even the most experienced to reduce somewhat their estimate of yield, while the price has advanced 3¼ cents this week.

"Corn advanced about a cent with wheat, but has since lost all the gain. Cotton has remained unchanged at 7 cents, although the latest reports favor larger estimates of yield a circular by Neill going much beyond other figures. It is somewhat significant that the stock markets show entire indifference to crop reports.

"Prices of iron and steel products still rise, the feature this week being the startling advance of fifty cents per keg in cut and wire nails, with new cards for various sizes which, it is stated, make the advance actually greater than it appears.

"The financial situation is not disturbed by gold shipments, nor by the large excess of treasury expeaditures, amounting to about $12,300,000. Receipts are naturally better in July than in most other months, but expenses are also large. Money scarcely begins to go out for crop moving and the demand for commercial loans is not as large locally as it should be.

"Failures for seventeen days of July show liabilities of $6,599,751, of which $1,993,528 were of manufacturing and $3,924,881 of trading concerns. A year ago corresponding reports covered $6,317,696, of which $3,588,938 were of manufacturing and $2,483,011 of trading concerns. Failures for the week were 202 in the United States, against 249 last year, and 27 in Canada, against 39 last year."

A LONG LIST.

Many Persons Thought to Have Been Victims of Holmes.

CHICAGO, July 29.—Every day brings to light one or more atrocious murders committed by H. H. Holmes. In all, so far as known, circumstantial evidence of the strongest character points to the man as the slayer of the following:

Conner, Julia L., who lived with Holmes as his wife; supposed remains found in basement of Holmes' building, 701 Sixty-third street, Chicago.

Conner, Gertrude, daughter of above: supposed remains found in basement of Holmes' building, 701 Sixty-third street, Chicago.

Cigrand, Amelia, Holmes' secretary; disappeared.

Pitzel, Benjamin F.; dead body found at 1316 Callowhill street, Philadelphia.

Pitzel, Howard, 11 years old, son of Benjamin F Pitzel; disappeared; supposed to have been murdered in Indianapolis.

Pitzel, Alice, daughter of Benjamin F. Pitzel; dead body found in the cellar of St Vincent street house, Toronto.

Pitzel, Nellie, daughter of Benjamin F. Pitzel; dead body found in the cellar of St Vincent street house, Toronto.

Williams, Minnie, disappeared from 701 Sixty-third street, Chicago, where she lived with Holmes; supposed to have been murdered.

Williams, Annie, younger sister of above; disappeared as did her sister.

Wild, Miss, formerly a clerk in Holmes' employ at the "Castle;" she disappeared two years ago and has never been heard from.

In addition to this Holmes is believed to have been concerned in the murder of Mrs. Cron, the old woman who was so ruthlessly killed at Wilmette two years ago.

Other persons known to have been identified with Holmes at Englewood and other places have disappeared, but as yet little evidence has been found to show that Holmes had a hand in their sudden retirement from usual scenes.

Campos' Defeat at Valenzuela.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., July 27.—A cablegram from Key West says. A private letter received in this city per steamer Mascotte, from Havana confirms the report of Martinez Campos' defeat at the battle of Valenzuela. Of the 1,000 Spanish troops that went into battle, only 300 escaped to Bayamo, where they are surrounded by 6,000 Cubans under Maceo, Masso, Quinlan, Bandera and Goulet. The insurgents' loss at this battle was 280 killed and wounded.

Lynched an Innocent Man.

FORD, Ky., July 20.—It developed Friday that the negro, Bob Haggard, who was lynched here last week, charged with having outraged Miss Elkin, was innocent of the crime with which he was charged. The story told of how the deed was done has been proven to be utterly false. The work was done by a few hot-headed men who did not take time to inquire whether Haggard was guilty or not.

No Massacre at Jackson's Hole.

SALT LAKE CITY, U. T., July 30.—The wild rumors received Saturday that a general assassination of whites had occurred at Jackson's Hole appear to be without foundation in fact, and a short dispatch received at an early hour Saturday morning from Market Lake saying that all was quiet at Jackson's Hole and no fighting had occurred has since been confirmed.

Passes Away.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Rev. Dr. Edward Beecher, brother of the late Henry Ward Beecher, died at his home, 182 Macon street, Brooklyn, early Sunday morning, aged 91 years.

William Rees, of Edinburg, Ill., was killed by a Chicago & Alton train at Chatham, Ill.

NICARAGUAN WARRIORS.

Not a Very Formidable Force, According to English Eyes.

There is a story of a Nicaraguan general who wrote to a brother officer to inform him that he sent him a body of three hundred volunteers, praying him, at the same time, to return the ropes immediately. This is the keynote of Nicaraguan affairs.

If a man wishes to take office, he has only to get a sufficient force together, slaughter a few thousands, lay waste as large a portion of his native land as possible, and then wait for the defeated government to retire across the border on muleback.

During its seventy-two years of independence Nicaragua has acknowledged five times as many rulers as it did during the three centuries of Spanish rule, so that there is hardly a man in the republic who has not been in action, hardly a child who has not seen the horrors of war and the smoke of burning villages.

The common soldier is a picturesque, but not very martial figure. He is almost always barefooted, and is generally clothed in a blouse of coarse blue cloth, although his uniform is left largely to his own choice.

The sentries sit upon the ground, or lounge in the shade against the nearest post. When they think they have remained long enough on duty, they stroll away, dragging their rifles by the muzzle, or carrying them, with much effort, across their backs.

At Momatombo, the terminus of the railway nearest the capital, the troops live in a mud house roofed with palm leaves. At stated intervals a barefooted soldier emerges with great state from these quarters, and moves about in the streets, beating a discordant drum, while another, probably a child of 12 or 14, practices on the bugle in the veranda of the commandant's mansion. In this manner the pomp and power of the passing government is pressed upon the populace.—London Sketch.

"THE curious thing about my business," said the mosquito, alighting softly upon the nose of the sleeping victim, "is that it's more fun to go to work than it is to stay to hum."

"LITTLE BROTHER OF THE AIR."

There is a bird I know so well,
It seems as if he must have sung
Beside my crib when I was young;
Before I knew the way to spell
The name of even the smallest bird,
His gentle, joyful song I heard.
Now see if you can tell, my dear,
What bird it is that, every yea r,
Sings "Sweet—sweet—sweet—
very merry cheer."

He comes in March, when winds are strong,
And snow returns to hide the earth:
But still he warms his heart with mirth,
And waits for May. He lingers long
While flowers fade; and every day
Repeats his small, contented lay;
As if to say, we need not fear
The season's change, if love is here
With "Sweet—sweet—sweet—
very merry cheer."

He does not wear a Joseph's-coat
Of many colors, smart and gay;
His suit is Quaker brown and gray,
With three dark patches at his throat
And yet of all the well-dressed throng
Not one can sing so brave a song.
It makes the pride of looks appear
A vain and foolish thing, to hear
His "Sweet—sweet—sweet—
very merry cheer."

A lofty place he does not love,
But sits by choice, and well at ease,
In hedges, and in little trees
That stretch their slender arms above
The meadow-brook; and there he sings
Till all the field with pleasure rings;
And so he tells in every ear,
The lowliest home to heaven is near
In "Sweet—sweet—sweet—
very merry cheer."

I like the tune, I like the words:
They seem so true, so free from art,
So friendly, and so full of heart,
That if but one of all the birds
Could be my comrade everywhere,
My little brother of the air,
I'd choose the song-sparrow, my dear,
Because he'd bless me, every year,
With "Sweet—sweet—sweet—
very merry cheer."

—Henry van Dyke, in Century Magazine.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

BY M. QUAD.

"LAST night," said Mr. Bowser as he looked up from his paper and broke a silence which had lasted a quarter of an hour—"last night I heard our child moaning in his sleep, and I noticed that he looked pale and hollow-eyed this morning. I suppose you know what ails him?"

"Nothing ails him, Mr. Bowser—nothing but too much play. You can't find a healthier child in the whole town."

"I hope 't is true, but I doubt it. Having him under your eye every hour in the day, you do not notice a change as I do. This afternoon a woman came into the office selling a book on 'How to Bring up Children.' I had only to glance at it to see that it was just what you wanted. It is full of—"

"Who wrote it?" sharply demanded Mrs. Bowser.

"I'll show you the book. It tells all about mumps, measles, chicken pox and everything else likely to ail a child, and also prescribes the cure. Let's see! It's by Annie Kathering White. Did you ever hear of her?"

"Never, and I don't want to! It's ten to one that she was never a mother and doesn't know a case of mumps from falling off a fence! For the land's sake, don't get the idea that our child wants dosing!"

"Our child may be all right, Mrs. Bowser, or he may be all wrong. It won't hurt anything to read what the woman says. For instance, she gives the premonitory symptoms of measles, and says that a mother—'"

"He had measles three months ago!"

"Well, here's all about whooping-cough. 'Twenty-four hours before the cough comes the patient is restless, the tongue coated and the whites of the eyes—"

"I know all about that, and it will be quite useless for you to go up to his bed to see if the whites of his eyes have turned blue or green. You have hardly looked at him for three months past, and now all of a sudden you are greatly worried over his condition!"

"Mrs. Bowser!" said Mr. Bowser, as he stood up and flourished the book in his hand, "do you know that you are talking to that child's father!"

"Of course, I do!"

"Then don't talk in that way! As that child's father I naturally love him. I feel anxious about his health. A woman who has probably reared a dozen children of her own writes a book on how to treat children. I buy it and bring it home to you to save worry and doctor's bills, and you take it as a grievous insult. Here is what the book says about mumps. I was reading it on the car coming home, and as near as I can make out our boy will be down with mumps before sunrise to-morrow. It says that the premonitory symp—"

"DO YOU KNOW THAT YOU ARE TALKING TO THAT CHILD'S FATHER?"

"How many times do children have the mumps?" quietly asked Mrs. Bowser.

"H-how many times? Why do you ask?"

"Because he had 'em six months ago! Your natural anxiety about your offspring should have made you remember the circumstances."

"Y-e-s-um! Yes, I do remember that he had the mumps, or what you called the mumps. I suppose he has also had the chicken-pox?"

"Certainly he has!"

"And the whooping cough?"

"Yes, when he was only eight months old."

"Mrs. Bowser, when I looked into that boy's face this morning I was shocked. I tell you his system is all out of gear, and he needs something to brace him up. As near as I can make out from this book he has some ailment of his liver, and I propose—"

"You propose to give him some of your dope!" she finished as he hesitated.

"My dope! You said dope, didn't you! What do you mean by dope!"

"I mean the barrel of stuff you have bought and taken a dose or two of and then put away. If anything is wrong with that child we'll call in a doctor."

"Mrs. Bowser, if that child has worms—if the seal of death has already been stamped—"

"But he has no worms!" she interrupted. "If anything ails the child he is too healthy. If you want to take four hundred different sorts of sarsaparillas, invigorators, tonics, cures and all that I have no objections, but for mercy's sake don't get a fad about our child!"

"Fad! Fad!" he echoed. "Then it's a fad, is it, to discover the symptoms of a deadly disease and apply a remedy in time! As the loving father of that child it is not only my duty but my privilege to look him over and guard him. That hectic flush on his face this evening did not escape my notice. For all you know he may be coming down with scarlet fever.

"That hectic flush was caused by his playing circus and standing on his head," replied Mrs. Bowser. "He gets ten hours' sleep every night, eats like a man, and never even has a sore throat."

"Have you heard him moan out in his sleep, Mrs. Bowser—moan and groan and sigh and sob? Perhaps not, but I have, and this book says those are the premonitory symptoms of spinal meningitis. Before the clock strikes midnight we may be childless!"

"And before the clock strikes ten I'll throw that book into the stove!" she hotly replied. "The idea of an old maid writing a book to tell mothers how to bring up children! And the idea of your paying two or three dollars for such nonsense!"

"Am I in my own house, or am I not!" shouted Mr. Bowser as he rose up and glared at her.

"Yes, of course," she answered.

"And am I the father of that child!"

"Of course."

"Then I am going to see him and determine for myself whether he will live the night out or die before another sun rises! If you wish to accompany me to his—"

But just then young Bowser, who had been awakened by his father's loud talk, came downstairs in his nightdress, and he presented such a picture of good health that Mr. Bowser sat down with the feeling that he had lost his case. It wasn't until Mrs. Bowser was leading the boy back to bed that the father found words to say:

"Death may not have actually placed its mark upon his brow, but it can't be far off. I'll look him over in the morning."

"And the lawyers—the alimony—custody of the child, and so forth?" she queried, as she paused on the stairs.

CAME DOWNSTAIRS IN HIS NIGHTDRESS.

He glared and glared, but made no reply, and when she was out of sight he opened the window, threw the book at a cat on the fence, and then sat down and whispered to himself:

"That's another close call for me, and if I don't put my foot right down I'll be turned right out of my own house inside of a month!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE REGULAR ARMY.

Provisions for the Enjoyment of the Soldiers.

An enlisted man serving on the frontier has opportunities for sport that would be envied by hundreds of wealthy men, especially in the way of hunting and fishing. He plays all kinds of outdoor games, is regular in his habits, has stated times for meals and for sleep, which all tend to the development of his physical powers, and the training he receives strengthens his frame and gives him an easy, upright carriage that never after leaves him until old age lays the weight of its hand upon him.

The post exchange is fitted up with billiard and poolroom, lunch-counter and cardroom. Only the best grades of beer are sold there, and drunkenness cannot exist under present restricted rules. A pleasant room is always set aside as a reading-room, where current newspapers are on file, and in addition to this each company usually maintains a library. A post school is maintained for six months of the year, where he may improve his mental condition, if he desires. He is provided with excellent clothing, which, when altered to fit neatly, is the nattiest uniform known.

A drunkard or other questionable character may possibly creep in among the men enlisted, but he is soon "spotted," and under the law that five previous convictions by courts martial are sufficient to award dishonorable discharge, he is soon gotten rid of. It is creditable to the army that all men now serving in the ranks, except possibly a few left over from the old army, are capable of reading and writing the English language, that is, in a limited sense.

To enter the service a man must submit a certificate of character from his last employer, and in many other ways satisfy the examining officer that he is a worthy young man. If he be intelligent his services are sought by the different department chiefs as clerk, or in some other capacity. The new law which allows any enlisted man of two years' service to apply for examination with a view to securing a commission has already induced many bright young men to enter the ranks. If the people can only be prevailed upon to cast aside the prejudice which has blinded their judgment of the army for the past twenty years, our young men will be only too willing to enlist, and enjoy the benefits that accrue during a three years' term of service.—Harper's Weekly.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A Fiend.

Edward Anderson, the inhuman fiend who at Eureka, near Farmington, killed his 12-year-old niece Josepoine Sherdahl, by cutting her throat with a razor, is now safely secured in the Dakota county jail at Hastings. The crime is the most unexplainable that has yet been recorded among the bloody deeds that have stained the fair name of this state. Anderson was arrested at once and brought to Farmington, about 10 miles away, and there he lay over night in custody of W. H. Brownell, the village marshal, and the next morning he was taken to the county jail. He freely admitted his crime, and when asked why he did it, answered: "I don't know; the devil must have been in me.

Killed.

James Hoban, assistant roadmaster of the Great Northern road for the Fergus Falls division, was killed at Evansville by a passenger train. Mr. Hoban had been at Evansville and about an hour before the train arrived he came into the station and told the operator to call him when the train arrived. When the train whistled the operator closed his office and looked in the waiting room for Mr. Hoban. He did not see him, but as he stepped on to the platform he saw him lying on the track a few feet in front of the train. He could not save him and Hoban received injuries from which he died in an hour. He leaves a wife and five children.

Will Close.

By concerted action all the offices, or nearly all, in the capitol building will be closed hereafter at 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoons until Sept 1. While this agreement has been generally signed by the heads of the different departments, and acquiesced in by the governor, some of the offices will continue to remain open until a much later hour. The attorney general says he will practically be found in his office at all business hours, for the reason that peremptory writs and other legal processes may be sought for at almost any hour. The auditor's office will also be found open at least the greater portion of the afternoon.

Lightning's Work.

Lightning during the storm at Hills, played a number of peculiar freaks. It struck a barn belonging to Mike Ruddy, several miles east of there, consuming the barn and several head of horses. Nels Iverson's barn, one mile east, was struck, but was discovered in time to save the building. The seat of a buggy driven by E. W. Colby was shivered in pieces beneath the driver, who miraculously escaped injury. A shock of grain and several fences and other things were also struck. That section was visited by a water spout; water stood three inches on the level.

News in Brief.

Martin Olson, an employe of the Carver Free Press, was drowned while bathing in the river at that place.

Russell Liggett fell through a hay chute of the barn at the Agricultural farm, a distance of 30 feet. The floor of the stable is of cement, and the fact that there was a large pile of hay at the bottom of the chute is all that saved the boy's life. As it was, his ankle was broken and his back and head were injured.

George Holmes, 19 years old, while laying brick on the Ray building at Mankato, fell from the third story onto a pile of stone and was so badly injured that he is likely to die.

At the opening of the summer school at Fergus Falls 249 students were on hand.

A 10-year-old son of J. C. Varney, of Princeton, met his death by being jerked into a deep well by the slipping of the bucket from the curbing. He was trying to hold the bucket, but it carried him down. His skull was crushed.

The parents of Miss Helen Reid, of Minneapolis, have made application to have her placed in the insane asylum at St. Peter. Miss Reid is not yet 17 years of age and her trouble is the result of over study.

John Zirkelbach, sergeant of police at St. Paul, was drowned in White Bear lake while boat riding. It is thought to have been accidental.

A young man named White, while out hunting near Lake Cohasset, accidentally shot himself in the side. He died in great agony.

The contract for the high school building at Canby was let to A. C. Ochs, of Springfield; amount, $11,909. Work is to begin immediately.

Fred W. Merritt, aged 13, was accidentally killed by his elder brother while the latter was mowing grass. Fred was about to take up an armful of hay when the scythe struck him just above the temple.

Gov. Clough recommitted Timothy Rowles to the penitentiary to serve out an unexpired term for grand larceny. He was pardoned by Gov. Nelson upon a promise to refrain from drink. This he failed to do.

At the meeting of the state game and fish commission held at St. Paul, Clarence Watkins was appointed superintendent of the state fish hatchery, to succeed S. S. Watkins, deceased.

City Treasurer J. E. Hennemann, of St. Cloud, has made his report to the board of equalization. The total valuation is $537,834. According to his books the personal property valuation of St. Cloud is about $27,000 less than last year. There has been a decrease of $29,090 on goods and merchandise and $7,000 on bank stock.

A postoffice has been established at Copley, Beltrami county, with Albert B. Johnson as postmaster, and one at Harriet, Hennepin county, with May Moot as postmistress. The postoffice at Floritta, Renville county, has been discontinued.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Tomato Sauce: Strain one quart of canned tomatoes, add half a cup of sugar, and when it boils thicken with two tablespoonfuls of corn starch. Season to taste.—Chicago Record.

—Birthday Cake: One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three cups of flour four eggs, one cup of milk, two teaspoons of baking powder. Bake in a large dripping pan and frost heavily. A very delicious cake.—Mrs. H. M. West, in Western Rural.

—Breakfast cereals should always be cooked in a double boiler, because much stirring renders them extremely starchy, and when they are boiled in a single boiler stirring is the only preventive of burning. They will be much richer and more palatable if cooked with milk than with water.—N. Y. World.

—To Destroy Beetles: Make wafers in the following way: Take an ounce each of red lead, castor sugar, and flour, mix them together, and roll out very thin. Cut them in small rounds, and place them on the floor at night, wherever the pest congregates. This is one of the surest methods of ridding a house of beetles.—Leeds Mercury.

—Scalloped Salmon: Open a pound can salmon, pick free from skin and bones, and lay a first layer of salmon, then a layer of bread crumbs, peper and salt, and a little butter, then put in more salmon and bread crumbs in alternate layers until the baking dish is full. Add a teacupful of milk, and bake about fifteen minutes.—Prairie Farmer.

—Chicken-Tomato Soup: Clean and cut up the chicken, place it on to cook in a deep kettle with a gallon of water. Stew slowly till the meat will readily separate from the bones. Take out the chicken and put away to cool. To the stock add a third of a can of tomatoes, an onion sliced fine, pepper and salt; thicken with a tablespoonful of corn-starch mixed with a little cold water; let it boil slowly an hour and a half.—Chicago Record.

—Cheese Egg Toast: Boil two eggs hard, pound them in the mortar with enough cream to make them into a paste, season with pepper and salt, and mix in a tablespoonful of good grated cheese. Toast a round of bread from a tin loaf, cut off the crust, butter it, and cut it into four or six pieces; spread each piece thinly with anchovy paste, pile the egg mixture on the top, and cover with bread crumbs, and a tiny bit of butter on each piece; place in the oven to get hot, and serve.—Leeds Mercury.

—Raspberry Jam: To five or six pounds of red raspberries (not too ripe) add an equal quantity of finest white sugar. Mash the whole well in a preserving kettle; add about a quart of currant juice, or ripe currants, boil gently until it jellies upon a cold plate. Put into small jars, cover with brandied paper, and tie a thick, white paper over them. Keep in a dark, dry and cool place. Strawberries and blackberries may be jammed in the same way, leaving out the currants.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

—Beef-Loaf: Two pounds of lean beef chopped fine, with two cups of bread-crumbs, and seasoned highly with pepper, salt, nutmeg, sweet marjoram, and a little minced onion, and wet up with half a cup of good gravy; two eggs beaten light, and mixed with the meat. Press firmly into the mould, fit on the cover, and set in a dripping-pan of boiling water to cook slowly for an hour and a quarter. When done, let it get perfectly cold before turning out. It must be cut in thin slices at the table.—Home Queen.

CURL YOUR OWN FEATHERS.

How This Necessary Operation May Be Easily and Excellently Done.

There are a few things that give a hat a more rumpled and shabby appearance than an ostrich feather limp and dejected, looking almost as forlorn as when it and its fellows arrived here fresh from ostrichland. Anyone seeing an ostrich feather then would think it only fit for the ragbag, but a series of brisk scrubbings in warm soapsoads on a washboard, a judicious patching together and elimination of ragged places where Sir Ostrich has preened himself too vigorously, a curling and combing, soon make of the ostrich feather a thing of beauty and joy forever—until it gets wet—when the process of rejuvenation again becomes necessary.

If taken to my lady milliner or the less pretentious feather renovator every time this duty becomes imperative, the ostrich plume becomes metamorphosed into something of an elephant to one who bears not Fortunatus' purse; but the restorative process is so simple, when one knows just how, that every woman can readily become her own "feather artist."

Have a teakettle full of boiling water; shake the feather vigorously through the escaping steam, taking care that it does not get too damp. This livens up the plume and restores brilliancy if it has become dull and dusty. Next take a silver fruit-knife and, beginning with the feathers nearest the quill, take a small bunch between thumb and forefinger and draw gently over the blade of the knife until they curl as closely as desired. Follow this process up each side of the tip; then take a very coarse comb, comb out carefully, and you have your plume as good as ever.—N. Y. Times.

Where Love is Secondary.

A conspicuous difference between the English and Chinese dramas is explained by the fact that, whereas in the former love holds a leading part, in the latter it is relegated to a secondary place. In England it is a passion; in China a sentiment only; hence the thousand intrigues love gives rise to are, in the latter country, either thrown into the shade or tabooed entirely. Without their ardent passions many of our theatrical productions would lose their interest and most of their merit. An English, or, to use a wider term, a European play-goer, requires a due quantity of love. In China, on the other hand, this demand finds little echo, since love there is not the chief theme of bard and painter. Convention and the strength of parental authority have crushed, in a great measure, those amorous longings which exist in the human heart; and as love, courtship and matrimony in the far east are even more prosaic than in our part of the world, the first of these feelings, if handled as a passion, can not powerfully arrest the attention of the multitude.—Nineteenth Century.

He Will Not Drown Himself.

(From the Troy, N. Y., Times.)

R. W. Edwards, of Lansingburg, was prostrated by sunstroke during the war, and it has entailed on him peculiar and serious consequences. At present writing Mr. E. is a prominent officer of Post Lyon, G. A. R., Cohoes and a past aide de camp on the staff of the commander-in-chief of Albany Co. In the interview with a reporter, he said:

"I was wounded and sent to the hospital at Winchester. They sent me together with others to Washington—a ride of about 100 miles. Having no room in the box cars we were placed face up on the bottom of flat cars. The sun beat down upon our unprotected heads. When I reached Washington I was insensible and was unconscious for ten days while in the hospital. An abscess gathered in my ear and broke; it has been gathering and breaking ever since. The result of this 100-mile ride and sunstroke was heart disease, nervous prostration, insomnia and rheumatism. A completely shattered system which gave me no rest night or day. As a last resort I took some Pink Pills and they helpedme to a wonderful degree. My rheumatism is gone, my heart failure, dyspepsia and constipation are about gone, and the abscess in my ear has stopped discharging and my head feels as clear as a bell when before it felt as though it would burst, and my once shattered nervous system is now nearly sound. Look at those fingers," Mr. Edwards said, "do they look as if there was any rheumatism there?" He moved his fingers rapidly and freely and strode about the room like a young boy. "A year ago those fingers were gnarled at the joints and so stiff that I could not hold a pen. My knees would swell up, and I could not straighten my leg out. My joints would squeak when I moved them. That is the living truth.

"When I came to think that I was going to be crippled with rheumatism, together with the rest of my ailments, I tell you life seemed not worth living. I suffered from despondency. I cannot begin to tell you," said Mr. Edwards, as he drew a long breath, "what my feeling is at present. I think if you lifted ten years right off my life and left me prime and vigorous at forty-seven, I could feel no better. I was an old man and could only drag myself painfully about the house. Now I can walk off without any trouble. That in itself," continued Mr. Edwards, "would be sufficient to give me cause for rejoicing, but when you come to consider that I am no longer what you might call nervous and that my heart is apparently nearly healthy, and that I can sleep nights, you may realize why I may appear to speak in extravagant praise of Pink Pills. These pills quiet my nerves, take that awful pressure from my head, and at the same time enrich my blood. There seemed to be no circulation in my lower limbs a year ago, my legs being cold and clammy at times. Now the circulation there is as full and as brisk as at any other part of my body. I used to be so light-headed and dizzy from my nervous disorder that I frequently fell while crossing the floor of my house. Spring is coming and I never felt better in my life, and I am looking forward to a busy season of work."

Peculiarities of Ferrets.

Ferrets are usually rather shy and sometimes are very cross and bad-tempered. If they take a fancy to people, they are like squirrels and can be caressed and made much of and enjoy it very greatly. Ferrets were originally brought from England. They are of great value to clear premises of rats. When not hunting, the ferrets should be kept in a dry box or pen, with the top off, the depth to be about three feet, the bottom filled in with sawdust or earth. The rat is the natural prey and the favorite food of the ferret. When there are no more rats, raw meat is the very best thing to feed, although bread and milk, or any other food, with the exception of salt meat, can be given them, together with milk and water, the same as to cats. At first the ferret should be handled by the tail or back of the neck, the latter being the preferred way. A strange ferret should never be handled from the front, as he may bite.—N. Y. Ledger.

Cherry Pie.

Delicious little cherry pies are made by lining rather large and deep patty-pan tins with a good pie-crust, filling them with stoned cherries in abundance, mixed with enough fine, fresh cracker-crumbs to absorb the juice. Spread the top with well-beaten white of egg. Small cherry puddings made from biscuit-dough like a batter dropped in deep cups and steamed are very nice. Drop in the cup a tablespoonful of the dough, then a deep layer of cherries, then a layer of the dough, etc. Do not fill the cups more than two-thirds full. When cooked, invert the cups on pie-plates. With the puddings serve a thin sauce made of cherry juice thickened with arrowroot.—N. Y. Post.

It Depends.

The editor of a certain agricultural paper who is very cautious about giving his opinion received the following inquiry from a correspondent: "Can you tell me whether apples will keep better in a dry atmosphere than in a damp one, or vice versa?" The editor replied: "All things are relative in this world. Whether you could keep the apples better in a dry air or a damp air would depend very much on the number of small boys there were in the house."—Youth's Companion.

I rekumember dat doctor prosecription, en de nex' time I see dawg fight I try de 'speriment."

"Am de 'speriment wuk all right?" inquired old Duke's friend.

"Ee wuk all right een one way," replied Uncle Luke.

"Wha' de dawg do?"

"What he do?" answered Luke. "You see dat scah on my nose, same like Niggah doctor been waxinate me on my nose wie oshter knife? Well, dat's what de bulldawg do w'en I bite he tail. He leg go de tudder dawg, but he ketch on to my nose en chaw em right smaht."—N. Y. Sun.

DELANO DIARY

—The church ice cream social in the M. E. Church yard last night was well patronized and quite a success.

—The supplementary proceedings before Referee O'Hair, in the Otto case are drawing out to a wonderful length.

—A pleasant party was held at the residence of G. W. Bolton last evening in honor of guests from the west. Ice cream, cake and fruit, were served at a late hour.

--J. S. Cooper takes a part of his family with him this fine weather, on his perigrynations about the country. That oil tank cab makes quite a good vehicle for buggy riding.

—Several members of a missionary band have been holding services night and day at Watertown for a few weeks past. They hold open air meetings on the streets a part of the time.

—The game of base ball to be played on Tuesday, Aug. 6, on the Delano diamond, between the Waverly Pickets and the Delano Crickets is expected to eclipse everything of the kind for the season, in this part of the country.

—Rev. J. W. Powell who has been in the Methodist ministry for fifty years is now preaching his three sermons a day. He preaches every Sunday at Montros, Watertown and Delano. He is bound to keep up his record; and not let any young men beat him.

—We are in receipt of a catalogue and circular of the State Normal School at St. Cloud. There was enrolled last year 508 pupils; from over a large part of the state. The school appears to be doing well. Teachers should be as well versed in the methods of imparting knowledge to others and of exciting an interest in education in them as are ministers, lawyers or doctors in their respective professions.

—The base ball fever don't seem to abate much. A few days ago the Montrose team came down to do up the Blacks, but found them and the second nine out of town. The Montrose base ball club were just aching to play ball. Captain Joseph Berneck felt sorry for them having come so far and hunted up a few boys and took a part of the crowd that came with the visitors and beat the M. B. B. T. very badly.

—At least two members of the old village council claim that the last year's council never voted to give the pending $150.00 bonus for a creamery. It looks as if Mr. Roosen is to have the alms he asked from the village from the present council as if the p. c. will have to swell their disbursement column just that much more. Let some poor fellow that needs it ask the council to give him a few dollars to set up in business with and see what kind of an answer they would give.

—On Saturday afternoon the 19 year old son of Hugh Hanlon, of Minneapolis, met with a painful accident. His father bought a piece of land of Bev Yancy, near Shaw's crossing and father and son were doing some work on the place, the family remaining in the city. The young man was walking on the R. R. track carrying a shot-gun on his shoulder, which he allowed to slip from his grasp and fall behind him. The gun on striking the ground discharged a load of No. 4 shot into Mr. Hanlon's right foot near the instep and cut the large bone on the big toe side into a number of pieces. He walked to Grant Beal's, where surgical assistance was called and the wounded member made as comfortable as possible and he returned to his home at Minneapolis.

--Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—W. D. Young is having a fire sale. Read his notice.

—From the heavy crop of big weeds still growing in town one would think the village council had not yet read up on weeds.

—The High School scholars have been receiving their state certificates this week, from the Secretary of the Board of Education.

—A small drove of Shetland ponies attracted the attention of the small boys for a few minutes Wednesday morning, on their way through town.

—Several Delanoites attended the I. O. O. F. picnic at Minnetonka this week. A grand time was had. Mrs. Norton, of Minneapolis, won the Rebecca talking match.

—The committee appointed to secure the location of the Fourth Insane Asylum at this place held a meeting recently and took steps to advance the matter somewhat. They should succeed.

—Some of our villagers are already threatening to be on hand at the next village election to see that the present reigning power don't get another term. It is claimed that things are not run systematically, and that expenses are too great.

--Now would be a good time for the school board to have the school house scrubbed and cleaned and aired out nicely before school begins next month; and not wait until the day before the house is to be used and then have the children sent into damp rooms or school adjourn a day or two to dry up the house. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

--City papers are discussing the propriety of farmers holding their wheat, even if they are obliged to borrow money to meet their obligations. We think it would be more satisfactory, all around if farmers would sell what they are obliged to, to raise money for debts and running expenses, now, rather than risk holding wheat while paying interest to others. The crop is large and some of it can go for debts.

—The Eagle says the accident that happened F. H. Lindsley, by tumbling into a ditch might have happened in Minneapolis "if they were not looking where they were walking." The general opinion seems to be that had the accident happened on most any other corner in town, and I. Gutzwiller Jr. not been a member of the Committee on streets, the Eagle would howl terribly, and Mr. L. would draw pay for his time while crippled, at least.

—Farmers, generally, in this section, have improved the fine opportunity, this week to complete stacking their grain, from the present outlook, notwithstanding the usual discouraging predictions of the timid, the crops of all kinds bid fair to be away above the average. In case the outlook is verified, and prices keep up, we will expect, of course to see some of the long lower lips of the disconsolate husbandmen drawn up to their normal condition at least.

—The Old Bird's pin feathers were considerably ruffled last week about the school meeting. She sailed into Dr. Catlin because he asked for information on a few points which he and every other interested citizen of the district have a right and ought to to know. He asked if the Board wasn't valueing the lots pretty high in their financial report, it said the school house complete cost $6,796.30 and in giving the assets valued the building and grounds at $10,000.00. The Dr. wanted to know if $3,203.70 wasn't a pretty big price for seven lots in Delano; and when a concert of voices nndertook to defend the report, the Dr. was inquisitive enough to want to know what was the object in making such an estimate? And if all the estimates were made on the same basis? Also if the house should burn if the board could collect so much insurance as they were carrying? The Doctor said further, that the laws were very strict concerning the Treasurer's accounts, which should show the amount of money on hand in each fund provided for, and he wanted to know if there was money enough in the sinking fund to pay the bond of $2800. coming due, soon. No satisfactory answer was given; but the statement was made that the balance on hand, as reported, included the sinking fund. After the way people have been promised year after year, for the psst dozen years, that pretty soon there would be some of the old debt paid, and as often been fooled, it would be well for them to attend school meetings and take a little interest in school matters, where their children's futures are concerned, and the biggest part of their taxes are expended. It is a burning shame, and a disgrace to the community to tax the people the way ours have bee in this matter, and now ask young people who were ten years old when the debt was made to help pay the whole debt. Such financiering reminds one of the Menage business, or of the Building and Loan affairs.

County Cullings.

It is said the Eagle is about to loose a part of her anatomical construction; but that the "Vermiform Appendix" will remain in tact.

Rumor says that the Annandale Post will soon be transplanted into Maple Lake soil, where it will be expected to grow still more Rank.

For some reason or another the Summer School at Buffalo is not receiving the usual encomiums. The attendance was about ninety; but complaints are frequent that proceedings, from the very first, were altogether too slow.

The Waverly Tribune complains that the County Superintendent of Public instruction did not supply the "official" paper of the county with a copy of the notice of Teachers examinations Perhaps he preferred to give it to papers that charge living rates for work, and who are not working for the county at ½ ct. per folio.

The Cokato Commoner says: "H. C. Bull and M. Holmstrom crossed swords as attorneys in a criminal case here Monday evening. Both displayed rare forensic talent and a full knowledge of the rules of practice." And people had supposed since the eloquent Sexton shook Cokato dust from his pedal extremities the place was running without law or lawyers. Kind of going it "blind."

The Annandale Post pitched into Ben Harrison in great shape last week. It evidently don't go much on grandfather's hat. It is trying too to forgive Mr. Towne for some of his youthful indiscreetions in daring resent the castigations of the Pioneer-Press the Tribune and other party organs, and to coax him to assume his normal relation in the ranks of the faithful. It should be one of Congressman Towne's strongest recommendations to his constituency that he has convictions and dare maintain them in the face of such opposition and the loud and oft repeated reports of the self-constituted party whip lashes.

Last week in mentioning the expensive term of court just held in Wright county, we intended to say it was expected to amount to $2,500, but an additional figure appeared in print. The old Bird took occasion to say that was about the way we juggle with the Delano school district debt and the school house. Of course it does appear something like it, getting up into thousands so far, but then the figures on the school debt are so familiar to people in the district after 12 years that they can not be juggled very well by anyone. After faithful promises time and again that the entire debt would be wiped out before due, after ten years $16,000 of it was refunded, borrowed again, and the $2,800 is still hanging on to show the ability of the financiers.

MRS. LOFTY AND I.

Mrs. Lofty keeps a carriage,
So do I;
She has dapple grays to draw it,
None have I;
She's no prouder with her coachman
Than am I;
With my blue-eyed, laughing baby,
Trundling by;
I hide his face, lest she should see
The cherub boy, and envy me.

Her fine husband has white fingers,
Mine has not:
He could give his bride a palace,
Mine a cot;
Hers comes home beneath the starlight,
Ne'er caresses she;
Mine comes home in the purple twilight,
Kisses me;
And prays that He who turns life's sands
Will hold his loved ones in his hands.

Mrs. Lofty has her jewels,
So have I;
She wears hers upon her bosom,
Inside I;
She will leave hers at death's portal
By and bye;
I shall bear my treasure with me
When I die;
For I have love and she has gold—
She counts her wealth, mine can't be told.

She has those who love her—station
None have I;
But I've one true heart beside me—
Glad am I;
I'd not change it for a kingdom,
No not I;
God will weigh it in His balance
By and bye;
And then the difference He'll define
'Twixt Mr. Lofty's wealth and mine.

—Mrs. C. Gildersleeve.

Entered as Second-Class Mail Matter, at the Post Office in Delano, Minn

It looks more and more as if the next President of the U. S. will hail from some other than York State. The country wants a change and will work for it; so all parties may as well govern themselves accordingly.

The legal newspaper, according to the reported opinion of Attorney General Childs does not, necessarily, have to get out an issue on legal holidays, in order to maintain its legality. The Stillwater Gazette then is declared a legal paper notwithstanding the fact that it observed Christmas and Fourth of July by not getting out a paper.

The third term business for President of the U. S. seems to be dying out as it should. It seems now pretty well settled that Grover Cleveland will not even allow his name to come before the nominating convention. And the Ben Harrison move is about as unpopular, partially on the account of his being in search of a third nomination and for other good reasons as is the Cleveland third term cry.

The Minneapolis Tribune is getting kind of cute; she proposes that the Republicans have a lot of copies of Mr. Horr's summing up in his debate with Harvey, on the silver question, printed, and circulated as campaign documents. That would be going back on Mr. Harvey, but she don't seem to care for that. And then as is generally understood, the debate was to be copy-righted and the entire book sold to the public. Perhaps the Republicans can not manipulate things as they would like, without Mr. Harvey's consent.

The Omaha A. P. A trouble still brews. It seems the A. P. A's. are in the majority in the city council and disposed to use their power to their own advantage; same as do other parties, or cliques when opportunity presents. The salaries of police, members of the board of health, and other officials have been withheld from payment and it looks as if the courts would be called on to decide the fuss. Such troubles ought not to occur in this country; but they do, and have to be settled in some way, and by somebody.

Every Tub Should Stand on its Own Bottom.

In the great battle of life every tub should stand on its own bottom. Every individual should receive his just merits, should be given credit for what he is, and his abilities recognized in the proper places and at proper times. If a soldier is needed to defend our homes from the enemy a brave man should have the place. If a statesman is needed to make our laws, a man with ability in that line should be selected. If we are sick, the most skillful physician to be got should be called. If we wish a spiritual advisor the man whose upright life points him out as worthy is to be chosen. If a President of the country is to be elected, a man should be found whose character is above reproach whose example would tend to elevate the morals and mode of living of his constituency.

When a medical society meets it should not select its officers and deal out its posts of honor to brothers in the same lodge, in preference to the most able men in the profession, to which they belong. But those who have shown themselves as best fitted for leaders among medical men should be chosen. In a lodge of some secret society the officers should not all be doctors, lawyers, or shoemakers, simply because of the fact that it was in the power of one of those particular branches of business to place their fellow workmen there, but the best lodge members, those best qualified and most likely to advance the interests of the lodge should have a chance to do so, sometimes.

When a meeting of editors is held they should not elect all their officers from one political party because they happen to have the majority of voters present; but should distribute their plums among those who are practical editors and who deserve recognition for other than political reasons.

A man don't care to trust the life of his child or his wife in the hands of an unskillful physician simply because he is a member of the same church; Or he would not wish to employ a lawyer known to have no tact, to defend his property rights, or maybe his life, because he happens to be a member of the same family.

But when a man actually needs the help of a fellow man he wishes to get the help best adapted to his needs, regardless of the helpers other qualifications.

If a man is drowning he will not stop to enquire of the man who comes to his rescue to what church, lodge, nation or family he belongs; but he will lay hold on whatever chance is provided for his escape.

Although the rule may be to act as pointed out above, there are too many exceptions: and it is often the case that men, inferior in their trades, or professions, are brought to the front, through the efforts of those linked with them in some way. People who know others are superior to the men they talk up, and in some cases when they themselves require help they do not employ, but get the best, in preference to their much advertised friends, are to be pitied. Such things ought not to be. But the fittest should survive, and should surpass the inferior in life's race. And did every man stand on his merits there would be more truly qualified and deservingly eminent men than under the growing tendency at the times. Let every man stand on his own merits, as well as every tub on its own bottom.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2, 1895.

The statement made in this correspondence several weeks ago, that President Cleveland was not and would not be a candidate for a third term, was this week corroborated by members of the cabinet. Your correspondent has no desire to spring the I-told-you-so gag on your readers, but he cannot forbear saying that he knew what he was writing about when he ne made that statement and that he never makes positive assertions on anything less stable than a rock-bottom foundation.

Any body can say that, but you just keep tab on this paper and see if it isn't strictly true in this case, just as it has been in the past.

President Cleveland's position, according to those who have heard him express his sentiments, in regard to the next democratic Presidential nomination is just about what would be that of any other man of strong will and convictions occupying his position. He believes it necessary to the welfare of the democratic party and of the country that the man nominated for President by the democrats should carry out a fixed policy, which he has already indicated, and in order to be sure that no mistake is made he wishes to have a hand in naming the candidate. Wouldn't you, if you were in his place? Wouldn't any aggressive man? Of course there are democrats who differ with President Cleveland. That is a privilege he has always conceded to every democrat. His plan and that of his opponents will go before the democratic national convention, which will in its wisdom decide which shall guide democratic party through the next Presidential campaign, and to that decision all good democrats, regardless of their present opinions will bow. Let all the fighting inside the party be done between now and the assembling of the National convention, to elect delegates in accordance with your views; after a majority of those delegates have agreed upon a platform and two-thirds of them upon a ticket, let the the fighting all be against the common enemy, and for that platform and ticket.

Secretary Lamont's generally acknowledged political sagacity causes his opinions to be highly valued when given, which is seldom. It has pleased many democrats to learn that he has expressed the belief that ex-Secretary William C. Whitney, of New York would be the strongest man the democrats could nominate for President, and that he could easily defeat any candidate the republicans could put up. It has been known for some time that the republicans were very much afraid of Whitney and that they would do anything they could to prevent his nomination. New York republicans visiting Washington have said that in their opinions no member of their party could carry New York against Whitney, and New York democrats are positive that it could not be done by anybody.

State department officials will not discuss the Waller case, but there are good grounds for the belief that the reason Waller is still in a French prison serving out a sentence of twenty years imposed on him by a French Court Martial in Madagascar, on a charge of having betrayed certain movements of French troops against the natives is that this government has no justifiable ground for interfering in the case. Waller is a negro who was for a time a U. S. consul in Madagascar. After retiring from office against his will, he remained on the island and engaged in business, and some say, although his lawyer has denied it, that he went so far as to acquire citizenship there.

Some people have allowed themselves to become frightened by the statement that Louisiana would become a republican state if Comptroller Bowler decides, after hearing the arguments which are to be made next week, the original sugar bounty clause of the McKinley law to have been unconstitutional, and declines to appove the payment of the money appropriated by the last Congress to pay deferred sugar bounties. In order to get the opinion of one who is in a position to know, Judge Thomas J. Semmes, of New Orleans, who is in Washington to assist the Louisiana Congressional delegation in arguing in favor of the constitutionality of the sugar bounty, was asked if there was any probability of Louisiana becoming a republican state. The old gentleman's eyes flashed as he said with vigor and emphasis: "Never, sir; never! while there was some revulsion of feeling and discontent during the first part of Mr. Cleveland's present administration, the return of good times has removed it all, and the state may always be counted where she belongs—in the good, old democratic camp." Members of the Congressional delegation characterized the statement as a slander upon the democrats of the state.

"FOR GOD AND HUMANITY."

Woman's Column.

EDITED BY MRS. M. E. HOOVER.

Ninth Annual Convention of The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Wright County, Held at Buffalo, July 30, 1895.

The day being fine delegates and visitors began to arrive long before the hour for opening. There were present from Menticello, Rockford, Montrose and Howard Lake about eighteen members and a goodly number of visitors. The ladies of Buffalo had spared no pains to make the convention a success, decorating the M. E. church most beautifully for the occasion and providing ample entertainment both for delegates and visitors. The many improvements at the county seat were noted, and the beautiful day and tasteful, elegant homes, combined with the spirit of kindliness, that is always a feature of a woman's convention, made up a most delightful impression.

About 10:30 A. M. the Vice President called the meeting to order and Mrs. M. B. Hellier led devotional services. Reports of Secretary and of treasurer were read and adopted.

The committees were then appointed, a short address given by the Vice President, and a parlimentary drill by Mrs. Julia B. Nelson during which the curfew ordinance was discussed. The noontide prayer was offered by Mrs. Kreis.

Mrs. Kreis led the devotionals of the afternoon session, and the address of welcome, which was bright and cordial was given by Mrs. Noel.

Mrs. Murdock responded with an earnest plea for co-operation.

Mrs. Bradford responded with an earnest plea for co-operation.

Mrs. Bradford reported an encouraging union at Monticello. Mrs. Hoover reported the same for Howard Lake, and Mrs. Johnson for Rockford.

The papers for the symposium "Why I belong to the W. C. T. U." by Mesdames Hellier, Lillie, Hoover, and Miss Moore emphasized the principles of the organization, giving out no uncertain sound.

Miss Ewing fovored the meeting with a song and Miss Lillie with an instrumental selection and both were much enjoyed.

Mrs. Stacy's report on press work was read by Mrs. Bradford and accepted. The thanks of the convention were extended to her for her years work and to the editors of the county for favors rendered.

Mrs. Winchell's paper on "Wine drinking in France" read by Mrs. Johnson, and Mrs. McCornack's paper on "The Benefits of a liberal education in temperance work" read by Miss Cochran, were highly appreciated.

A solo by Mrs. Murdock was a pleasing feature of this session.

An intermission of thirty minutes was then given, after which Mrs. Nelson gave a short but instructive talk to mothers, reports of committees were heard, and a discussion held on practical plans of work. It was decided to arrange for a speaker to work in the interest of the organization in this county, one week semi-annually, commencing the last week in October, the unions contributing such sum as is necessary for the support of the work. Rev. Murdock spoke briefly in encouragement of the work. Officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. M. B. Hellier; Vice President, Mrs. F. H. Johnson, Secretary, Miss Pauline Moore; Treasurer, Miss Carrie Cochran.

In order to give Mrs. Stacy a much needed rest, Mrs. Hoover was appointed superintendent of press work for the county, but Mrs. Stacy was requested by the convention to superintend the work of scientific temperance instruction.

The retiring president, Mrs. Davis, whose ill health prevented her attendance was kindly remembered with thanks for service rendered.

At the evening session excellent music was rendered by the choir, devotionals were led by Mrs. Coverdale, a recitation given by Miss Lillian Walker and an address by Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, the new county president, Mrs. Hellier, presiding, in the absence of the chairman for the day.

Rev. Shannon of the M. E. church to whom the convention is indebted for many courtesies pronounced the benediction closing the convention.

At a regular meeting of Orono Lodge No. 218 I. O. O. F., working under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. of the State of Minnesota, the following Preamble and Resolutions were unaminously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to remove from our midst our late Brother, Milton I. Talbert and John L. Fleming a farmer resident of this vicinity died rather suddenly at Anamosa, Iowa, a few weeks ago.

The W. R. C. picnic held at Russells grove on Saturday was well attended. They were addressed by Commander Van Sant of the G. A. R., Hon. Loren Fletcher. Judge Torrence and others. Some of the auditors objected to the admixture of politics by some of the speakers in their addresses as it was supposed to be a social occasion instead of one for staking and ridering political fences of aspirants to public office.

BUFFALO BUNTS.

Fred Baker drove over from Monticello, Wednesday.

George Pond, of Novelty, Knox coounty; Missouri, is in this village for a short stay, while on a Northern trip for his health.

Mrs. Joseph Enghouser is visiting Albion relatives, this week.

M. A. O'Hair was a County Seat visitor, Tuesday.

J. W. Mounts, of Rockford, and Mr. Mc Mullen, of Minneapolis, drove up from Rockford, Wednesday.

The social given by the ladies of the M. E. Church, last Weenesday evening was well attended and netted them quite a sum.

Some time between midnight, Wednesday night, and Thursday morning, L. G. Gilbert's store was burglarized and $300 or $400 dollars worth of goods were taken. The building was entered by cutting the glass from a back door. The burglars seemed to understand their work as everything they took was of the best quality. Among other things taken were two suits of clothes, a dozen shoes, besides hats, shirts, silverware and jewelry.

C. T. Hellier was noticed on our streets, Thursday.

H. E. Grafft and Mr. Buck drove over from Delano, Monday.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

In the volumn of the book it is written, man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth out of his mouth.

We have reaped a bountiful harvest and the sheaves are being gathered and it is expected there will be bread enough and to spare. Threshing has begun and the wheat is turning out beyond expectation.

It may be this is the beginning of seven years of plenty.

While Cleveland is having a good time fishing at Gray Gables, the farmers of Minnesota are busy taking care of their crops. One receives fifty cents a bushel for wheat and the other $50,000 a year whether at work or play or whether wheat grows or not, but it takes good pasture for high stock, but they say everything works for good to them that love the Lord.

It seems that all kinds of crop will be in abundence this year, wheat, oats, corn, rye, barley, potatoes, all is 100 per cent. Hay will be a little short.

Quite a number, from Independence, atttended the G. A. R. Picnic at Long Lake last Saturday, they had quite an enjoyable time so they say, some of the dignitaries of Minneapolis were present.

G. W. Bradford who has been on the sick list so long is improving in health.

George Breet, of Minneapolis, was in our town two or three days last week.

E. K. Smith who has been on the sick list for a long time is not so well of late.

It is expected that the G. A. R. post and the W. R. C. of Maple Plain will be represented at the G. A. R. encampment at Louisville, Ky., on the 11, 12, and 13th. ot the coming September, a good time is expected.

It is thought by many that the dark cloud of adversity that hung over our country for the last two or three years is about to burst and scatter in profusion great riches upon the people.

In the language of Patrick Henry, we say "let it come" we are ready and willing to stand all such calamities.

B. R. Hoisington expects his mammouth threshing outfit sometime this week.

Farmers are not talking politics much now days, there seems to be but little glory in it at this present time.

The question on finance is being agitated quite a goodeal among a certain class of politicians, some seem to think that silver is a spurious money, and only fit for heathens or will answer to pay tribute to the idol Gods of dark and benighted lands, but when silver in this country is fully demonetized and we have gold as a single standard, only, then the poor will be made to cry out for some reffuge where they can hide from their oppressor and rejoice in their poverty as doth the Hindoo of foreign land. Then the rich man will be clothed in his coronation robes, and will sing prraises to John Sherman and the 53rd. Congress for all that they have done. Come weal or woe, come prosperity or adversity, I hope never to forget my love of country for a paltry sum of a few dollars.

The late showers we have had will revive up vegetation and help out the pastures.

D. M. Clough is making a much better governor than people in general expected he would, and the other aspirants for gubernatorial honors in 1896 will find that they will have hard work to defeat Clough, if he seeks a nomination, as he undoubtedly will.—Litchfield Saturday Review.

Late Literary News.

NOT since "The Anglomaniacs" has there been so clever a society satire as Henry Fuller's "Pilgrim Sons," Which is published in the August COSMOPOLITAN. The poems involved in woman's use of the bicycle are so startling and so numerous, under the rapid evolution of this art, that one welcomes a careful discussion of the subject by so trained a mind and so clever a writer as Mrs. Reginald de Koven. The COSMOPOLITAN illustrates Mrs. de Koven's article with a series of poses by professional models. A new sport, more thrilling than any known to Nimrod, more dangerous than was ever experienced by even a Buffalo Bill, is exploited in the same issue in an article on "Photographing Big Game in the Rocky Mountains," before shooting. The idea that ten cents for the COSMOPOLITAN means inferiority from a liteary point of view is dispelled by the apperance in this number of such writers as Sir Lewis Morris, Sir Edwin Arnold, Edgar Fawcett, Tabb, W. Clark Russell, Lang, Sarcey, Zangwill, Agnes Repplier, etc. Nor can we entertain the idea of inferiority in illustration with such names as Hamilton Gibson. Denman, Van Schaick, Lix, Sandham, etc., figuring as the chief artists of a single month's issue.

DELANO, Wright Co., - MINN.

A FRENCH cyclist named Huret has recently ridden over 500 miles in 24 hours. Such "scorching" must have blistered the roads.

IT is a curious fact that most of the philosophy of marriage is written by bachelors; most of the philosophy of bachelorhood by married men.

A PROMINENT banker of Hong Kong thinks a revolution in China is imminent, and that it will be mainly due to a book published about 450 years ago. The fuse in that shell must have been damp.

MRS. P. T. BARNUM'S announcement that the Englishman who is trying to marry her has no chance of winning her hand will be a serious blow to him, for he thought he had the greatest show on earth.

A CINCINNATI woman has sued a newly-wedded couple for $5,000 for services "for bringing about the match." There ought to be a proviso that the money be refunded with interest in case of a divorce.

THAT lightning does sometimes strike twice in the same place is proven in the case of a windmill in Bates county, Mo., which was last week struck by a bolt in exactly the spot where it was similarly struck three years ago.

A FEW more decisions like that of Judge Reed, of Brockton, Mass., who fined a farmer $25.08 for running into a bicycle, will tend to convince people that a bicycle is a vehicle, and hence has no place among the parlor bric-a brac.

GEORGE CURZON, who married Mary Leiter, of Chicago, won a seat at the English election by 764 majority over his liberal opponent. Curzon's wife worked with him all through the campaign and did more than he did to secure the victory. An American girl can fit into most any new conditions.

THE Indians of the Pine Ridge agency got up a realistic spectacle for their own amusement the other day, by a sham battle representing the Custer massacre. The spectacle wrought them up to such a pitch of fury that it would have been dangerous for any white man to have happened along there just then.

FOUR generations of one family were baptized together at Litchfield, Conn., on a recent Sunday. There were a little boy, Leonard Merrill; his father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, and great-grandfather and great-grandmother, the great-grandfather being 80 years old. The group entered the water at the same time.

"THE cart-wheel hat, the inflated cabbage-garden bonnet, the basket-of-roses head gear, hideous and obstructive," is the description given by the London Queen to the new feminine milinery now so much in evidence at matinees, and shutting out all view of the stage as effectually as would "two vegetable or floral-covered gardens or the headgear of a regiment of hussars."

BALLARD SMITH, referring to the recent overwhelming reverse of the liberals in England, cables to the New York World: "The leading liberal newspaper in London says that the defeat is solely due to 'unholy alliance between beer and the Bible.'" There are a good many queer alliances in American politics, but we have never had anything quite so extraordinary as a combination of beer and Bible.

PROF. STONE WIGGINS, of Ottawa, Ont., says the great lakes of North America are decreasing every year and the time is near at hand when Niagara falls will cease to be. One of the causes of the constant decrease in the volume of the great lakes is that the rivers that drain them are constantly wearing away the earth and gaining a deeper bed. But the chief cause is the constant decrease in the rainfall on the southern half of the continent.

THE state of New York has made a contract for the construction and equipment of an experimental system of canal boat propulsion by electricity on the Erie canal. Canal boats are to be supplied with electric propulsion at a rate not to exceed $20 per horse power a year. If the present experiment is successful all the canal boats in the state will be equipped thus. Each boat will thus have much more available space for freight. The scheme will revolutionize the canal business.

THE latest use of the bicycle is to enable the riders to commit highway robbery. Sedate people who go out of evenings in lonely neighborhoods will do well to be armed or leave their valuables at home. If the newest use of the wheel be persisted in manufacturers will have to devise a secret automatic whistle to go off as soon as the intent to rob is formed or the victims are in sight and hearing. Or the possible victims might wear upon their persons a robbers' electric alarm that would give a sufficient shock to intending highwayman to balk their fell purpose.

THE anti-tobacco reformers do not seem to be keeping up with the procession even, to saying nothing of making headway. The consumption of tobacco in its various forms shows a steady increase. During the month of July, according to government reports, there were manufactured in this country 365,726,647 cigars, 305,150,360 cigarettes, 22,057,443 pounds of tobacco, and more than 1,000,000 pounds of snuff. This was an increase over the production during the same period last year of nearly 2,000,000 cigars, 500,000 cigarettes and 1,500,000 pounds of tobacco.

MR. KRUPP, the famous cannon maker of Germany and proprietor of the Essen foundries, has been described as the man who paid the largest amount of taxes throughout the world. He paid annually about $200,000. But Mr. Marinesco-Bragadir, the most important manufacturer of alcohol in Roumania, who has recently established also a brewery at Bucharest, paid, in 1894, $440,000 of divers taxes to the government. This represents an immense fortune, which had a very modest origin, since Marinesco-Bragadir was an apprentice to a pastry cook only twenty years ago.

Defenseless Women Butchered While Begging for Life.

Horrors of the Recent Massacre of Missionaries in China—Corrected List of the Victims—Indignation Meeting in Shanghai.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The correspondent of the Times at Shanghai says the missionaries killed at Ku Cheng were murdered by an organized band of eighty of the vegetarians. The correspondent says the women begged for their lives, promising to yield their property and valuables, but the leader of the band shouted out his orders to kill them outright. A corrected list of the victims is as follows:

Gordon, Miss, speared in the head.
Irish, Miss Lena, burned in the head.
Marshall, Miss, throat cut.
Newcombe, Miss Stellie, speared and thrown down a precipice.
Saunders, Miss Nellie.
Saunders, Miss Topsy, speared on the train.
Stewart, Master Herbert, skull fractured and brained.
Stewart, Miss Lena, died from shock.
Stewart, Rev. Mr. and Mrs.

The correspondent says four other Stewart children and Miss Codrington were seriously wounded.

The Chinese magistrate at Ku Cheng waited for the completion of the massacre before appearing upon the scene. There are 1,000 soldiers at Ku Cheng. It is therefore absurd to say that the authorities could not have stopped the massacre, which was evidently carefully and secretly organized.

The American mission at Shashino, near Hankow, has been destroyed and the missionaries are fugitives. The American consul has advised the missionaries in adjacent provinces to retire.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 6.—At a crowded meeting Monday of the European residents of this city speeches condemning the action of the Chinese authorities in the case of the massacre of missionaries at Whai-Hau, near Ku Cheng, on Thursday last, were made and a resolution was adopted to appeal directly to the European goveruments against the outrage. The resolution also referred to the inadequate manner in which China has dealt with the perpetrators of the former outrages.

Some of the speakers at the meeting declared they have lost confidence in the diplomats at Pekin. United States Minister Denby and British Minister N. R. O'Connor are being especially denounced. The Americans desire a special commission under United States Consul Jernigan to inquire into the outrages in Ku Cheng. Minister O'Connor has assented to this.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—The statement from United States Minister Denby and Consul-General Jernigan that no Americans were injured in the attack by the Chinese mob upon the missions at Ku Cheng relieves the navy department from the necessity of ordering some of the American naval forces to the scene of trouble, although this incident will undoubtedly form the subject of another demand upon the Chinese government for reparation and indemnity for the outrage upon the property rights of the American missionaries.

STEAMERS BURNED.

Big and Destructive Fire in the River at Cincinnati, O.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 6.—The levee was visited by a $200,000 fire Monday afternoon, in which one half of the Laidley river steamboat line was destroyed within two hours. At 1:30 o'clock a pile of 1,000 bales of hay stored in the west end of the Cincinnati & Memphis wharf suddenly burst into flames and in ten minutes had communicated to the Louisville mail line wharf tied just above. To this wharf were tied the steamers Big Sandy, Carrollton and H. K. Bedford, the first two of which were entirely consumed their black hulls sinking in the murky waters at 4 o'clock. An up-river wind was blowing so stiffly that although the Carrollton and Big Sandy were cut loose they refused to float down stream, but were blown against the wharf and caught fire, notwithstanding all efforts to save them.

The loss on the Memphis wharfboat is placed at $20,000; on the Louisville wharfboat, $12,000; on the Big Sandy, $10,000. The steamer Big Sandy was valued at $60,000 and the Carrollton at $40,000. All the steamers and wharves were the property of Commodore Laidley, president of the White Collar line, and were insured for about two-thirds their value.

The excitement during the fire was intense and several employes received burns. Several children on the boats were rescued at some peril, but with no fatality.

RETURN TO RESERVATION.

Indians Say Their Hearts Feel Good—White Man the Aggressor.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—Commissioner of Indian Affairs Browning Monday received the following telegram from Agent Teter:

A telegram received Monday from Gen. Coppinger's headquarters says that three scouts from the Black Rock creek country report that all is quiet among the Indians.

CLOUDBURST RUINS A RIVER.

Boats Cannot Run Past Catlettsburg, Ky., Because of Sandbars.

CATLETTSBURG, Ky., Aug. 6.—A singular and costly affiar was a tremendous cloudburst followed by heavy rains in the upper Big Sandy valley last week. The flood literally ruined the river. It is so full of sandbars no boats can run, and the lumber business is at a standstill. At this point a bar has been formed entirely across the Ohio river and boats find it difficult to pass. It is feared the entire lumber business will be removed to Ashland, Ky.

Two Men Overcome by Poisonous Gases at South Perry, O.

CHILLICOTHE, O., Aug. 6.—Joseph Bingham and his brother-in-law, Oliver Benway, lost their lives while digging a well at South Perry. Bingham had entered the well. Not hearing him at work Benway called to him. Receiving no answer he had his wife and another woman lower him into the well, where he found Bingham dead, having been killed by poisonous gases. Finding himself being overcome, he signaled the women to pull him up, but before reaching the top he fell from the bucket and was killed. Both leave large families.

RULE OF THE MOB.

Creates a Reign of Terror at Spring Valley—More Trouble Feared.

PRINCETON, Ill., Aug. 6.—The rioters and the lawless held sway in Spring Valley Monday night. No arrests or attempts at arrests have been made and those anarchistically inclined are in high spirits. The mobs commenced operations Monday by stopping work at the various coal shafts, and during the entire day the streets swarmed with men and further depredations are expected at any time. All day both sides engaged in the bloody riots of Sunday were organizing their men and preparing for further displays of force. The aid of the law as yet has not been successfully evoked on either side, and if the belligerent parties attempt to carry out the resolutions adopted by them Monday bloodshed cannot be averted.

It has been impossible to locate the following negroes, in addition to those reported injured, several of whom it is positively asserted are lying dead in the ravines surrounding Spring Valley on the west:

Washington Anderson, aged 47 years; Arch Fleming, aged 35 years; Sam Johnson, aged 30 years; Lewis Martin, aged 35 years; Robert Nelson, aged 33 years, and Jack Elston, aged 42 years.

At a secret meeting of the Italians held at midnight Sunday night the plan of stopping the men from working was arranged. Also a call for a mass meeting of the miners was issued, to be held at the lumber yard adjoining the Rock Island depot at 10 o'clock Monday morning. Over 2,000 men assembled at the lumber yard at the appointed hour and the situation was freely discussed, nearly all of the speeches being in a foreign tongue. The coal company was roundly denounced, and much inflammatory language used. One speaker said if the murdered Italian was a relative of his he would not stop with the negroes, but would settle it at once and effectively with Manager Dalzell, of the coal company, whom he said deserved all the blame, as he had brought the negroes here.

After an hour of general discussion a resolution was adopted giving the remnant of the negroes left until 5 o'clock this (Tuesday) evening in which to leave the city and to carry off their effects. Any effects left after that time will be declared confiscated and destroyed. A committee was appointed to organize the Italians and see that the instructions were carried out. Another committee of five was appointed to wait upon Manager Dalzell to demand that he discharge all negroes and to agree to employ no new ones for the present. The committee immediately called at Dalzell's office and stated their grievances. Mr. Dalzell in reply said he had nothing on the subject to state and that it was a matter he would not discuss. The committee retired with no assurances. During the remainder of the day the streets were crowded with men discussing the situation.

The situation is indeed serious, and much is feared from those who have already indulged in rioting without molestation or arrest. The foreign element, which dominates the situation, declares that no man, either black or white, shall return to work until the coal company agrees to discharge every colored man in its employ and also to hire no new men of either race until all idle men of Spring Valley shall be given employment.

The negroes now propose to return to their homes and continue in their employment in the mines of the coal company. They held a mass-meeting at 10 o'clock Monday morning at the Union church, at Seatonville, where the negroes are rendezvousing, and voted to remain at Seatonville until their men were organized and then return to Spring Valley. A committee of six was appointed to visit Princeton in the meantime and endeavor to secure supplies for the 300 repeating Winchester rifles that are owned by Bureau county and stored in the courthouse to be used for the proteetion of citizens in case of riot.

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—Some of the colored residents of Chicago have been wrought up to a dangerous condition by the report of the outrages committed against their brethren at Spring Valley. Some of the more radical have openly threatened to march against the foreigners there with an armed force. Late Monday night a call to arms was issued and circulated in the colored community of the south side. The document calls on all able-bodied men to rise in defense of the race. It says:

"They are killing our people all over the country. Every day we read of the lynching, murdering and outraging of our people. We must remember that this is our country, and unless we fight for our rights the foreigners will run us out, as the government has not protected and will not protect us as we protected it in the time of need."

PEORIA, Ill., Aug. 6.—At a meeting of colored men Monday night twenty-six signed the roll to go to Bureau county and help their brethren. They will probably leave this morning. They have arms and ammunition.

Paper Mills Combine.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 6.—S. T. Ward, the local agent for a number of out-of-town paper mills, said that a news paper trust was an assured thing. The trust, he said, would have a capital stock of $35,000,000, and is intended to have a monopoly of the industry. He said that a slightly increased price is already demanded.

A Fireman Drowned.

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—Lieut. John T. Meyers, who commanded the fireboat Chicago, stationed at South Chicago, and who made a brilliant record during the world's fair as the commander of the fireboat Queen which was stationed in the lagoons, was drowned while bathing in the lake Monday afternoon off Grand Crossing.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

A Plucky Run.

The steamer Moore made the jump of Kettle Falls, at Rainy Lake, about 10 feet, with her captain and one man. The boat was steamed up, several Indians were stationed in the river below the falls with a lot of ropes, boats and canoes to avoid any accident to the two men. But at the last moment the engineer, Knapp, deemed prudence the better part of valor, and decided not to make the perilous trip. So the captain fixed a wire running from the pilot house to the engine room and attached it to the steam throttle so he could shut off steam when desired. Then casting off lines and pulling the throttle wide open, with full head of steam on, he steered into the current leading to the rapids above the falls which is confined in a narrow gorge, and where the water runs with a fearful current.

In making the run above the falls, the steamer struck three times on hidden rocks, one of which knocked a hole in her stern that caused her to leak so badly, that if the job of getting her over had not been done so quickly, she would have sunk. As it was they only had time to get her grounded at the landing. On the brow of the falls she struck a rock that shifted her rudder. The staunchness of her build also saved her from destruction. In making the plunge over the falls, the boat did not ship a drop of water, nor roll and pitch

Swamp Lands.

Col. Platt B. Walker, attorney for the state in the swamp land cases before the interior department at Washington, recently returned to Minneapolis. Col. Walker was appointed to represent the state on account of his long experience and his thorough knowledge of land matters and the points at issue in the cases now before the secretary of the interior. He has been successful in securing the reopening of the cases, which is a partial victory. Col. Walker says that he realizes that a long fight has been begun in the reopening of the cases. It involves $50,000,000 and is quite an important matter for the state. Col. Walker does not anticipate that the secretary will repudiate the law of 1860, under which Minnesota is entitled to all the swamp lands within her borders. He will visit the lands in dispute personally and examine the ground that is involved in the issue.

Lost His Life.

While at work in a well near Clarkfield, Oscar Dahl, a prominent young man, was overcome by foul gas and died before he could be brought to the surface. He was raised almost to the top before becoming entirely overcome, when he fell 30 feet to the bottom. It took three hours before his body was recovered. Fred Anderson, his partner in business, came very near losing his life in attempting to descend into the well after Dahl.

News in Brief.

The body of an unknown suicide was discovered in the river near Fort Snelling. The remains were those of a man about 45 years of age, roughly dressed. There was a rope about the neck and arms, and at the end of it a rock weighing about 20 pounds.

The state railroad and warehouse commission has granted to the express companies doing business in Minnesota an extension of time of 10 days in which to file a report with the commission showing the lines of road in the state upon which each company operates, and a copy of all tariffs and special rules in force in the state of Minnesota, with the classification and such rules and regulations as govern in the transaction of business.

J. W. Nash, one of the wardens of the state game and fish commission, has been looking up violations of the state game and fish laws about Winona and seeing that some of their provisions are complied with. He has ordered fish-ways to be built over dams at Rollingstone and Pickwick. He also captured a trout line 250 feet long in the Mississippi.

H. R. Welch and Gustav Koch were fined at Sauk Rapids for shooting two prairie chickens. The penalty and costs amounted to about $38.

Adam Decker, an old and esteemed citizen of St. Paul, is dead. He established a hardware business in that city in 1859.

D. M. McKey and Frank Anthony, civil engineers, are surveying a railroad to run from a point on the St. Louis river below Iron Junction up into township 59, range 19. The road is to be built by the C. N. Nelson Lumber Company, who will carry on extensive lumbering business next winter with camps located one and a half miles west of Mountain Iron.

James J. Hill has presented to the Minnesota Historical society 50 copies of Rev. William Wilkinson's book, "Minnesota Forest Fires."

Anoka narrowly missed a serious conflagration. Fire started in Goodrich & Jennings' prescription room, where carbolic acid crystals were being melted. By hard work the blaze was put out. Labels on the ether bottles were burned off, and other as terrible explosives were pretty well warmed. How they escaped an explosion and a serious fire is a mystery.

Gov. Clough has written a letter to the Duluth & Iron Range Railway people declining to sign the deeds for state land to be given to the company until the deeds have first been approved by the state auditor and a certificate accompanies them from the auditor.

When the office of the internal revenue collector at St Paul closed July 31 there had been reported paid from all points of the state, 2,975 retail liquor licenses, of which 450 were issued in St. Paul and 395 in Minneapolis. Retail malt dealers have taken out 215 licenses, wholesale malt liquor dealers 157, and wholesale liquor dealers 58.

At a meeting of the state railroad and warehouse commission, Albert C. Clausen was elected, by unanimous vote, to succeed himself as chief grain inspector. The term of office is for two years. Mr. Clausen will probably make no change in the personnel of the force of clerks who have been in his employ during the past term.

The state auditor and treasurer, after balancing up their big books July 31, at the close of business, found that the state had $2,014,139.036 in its strong box or in banks. This sum does not include the large June tax settlements of Hennepin and St. Louis counties.

A HOME BY THE SEA.

"Oh! give me a home by the sea,
Where the wild waves are crested with foam,"
Was the song that I sang so joyously,
In the light of my childhood home.
For the mountains were shutting us in,
And the hills were on every side,
And we could not see where the days begin,
Nor be sure if the world be wide.
But I smiled to my mother's smile,
And I laughed at my sister's words,
And the rippling brook I could hear, the while,
And the note of the summer birds,
As I sang the song that was sweet to me:
"Oh, give me a home by the heaving sea!"

"Oh! give me a home by the sea,
Where the wild waves are crested with foam,"
Was the song that I sang all merrily,
As I went from my mountain home.
Did I think of the wild bird's song?
Did I think of the sunset's hue?
Did I think of the hearts that had loved me long,
As I bade them a joyous adieu?
Did I look at the pictured hills,
And the emerald vales between?
Did I dream of the faithful love that fills
All the years that intervene?
Yes, but I longed away to be
Over the hills and beside the sea.

"Oh! give me a home by the sea!"
Do I sing the song to-night.
When the waves are echoing close to me,
And the billows are full in sight?
I can see the white-winged ships
That backward and forward go,
But my longing memory backward slips
To the place where the pine trees grow.
I can see the wild waves' foam,
But I whispered all the while:
"Oh, for a sight of the mountain home,
And the light of my sister's smile!"
And I long for the days that used to be,
And sing no more of the foaming sea.

"Oh! give me a home by the sea!"
Let me sing it again to-day.
A home—I know not where it will be,
Nor how I shall find the way.
But I know that a sea is there:
And I know there's a sea between:
And I know that the banks are forever fair;
And I know that the trees are green.
I am glad that the hills arise.
In the country where I shall go,
That a valley of peace beside them lies
And a river runs below.
The hands of my own, they are reaching for me—
Oh, give me a home by the crystal sea!

—Julia H. May, in Chicago Advance.

AN OPEN COMMISSION.

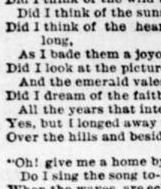
LORD LINKSHIRE. } Virtuosi.
MR. VERNON. }
MR. WILKINS, of Messrs. Bond & Marks, Coin Dealers and Antiquarians.
Actioneer.
Scene—A Coin Sale at Sotheby's.



LORD LINKSHIRE—You here, Vernon? How lucky. I wanted a good opinion. But I thought you were still whipping the Avon?

Mr. Vernon—No, I came back last night. And you? You are back sooner than you intended?

Lord Linkshire—Yes, I only ran up for this sale. I return to-night.

Mr. Vernon (suspiciously)—There is nothing very particular here—nothing in your line, that is?

Lord Linkshire—No, there is nothing Byzantine, but there is a rather out-of-the-way aureus. I want you to look at it.

Mr. Vernon—An aureus?

Lord Linkshire—Yes, a lovely little piece; in the highest condition, too. It's a—what's the woman's name? Lot 18, I think. (Consults catalogue.)

Mr. Vernon—Not the Plotina, Jack. Don't say you've come to buy that!

Lord Linkshire—Yes, that's it, the Plotina. (Looking up.) Scott, man!

"I ONLY RAN UP FOR THIS SALE."

You don't mean to say that you came for it, too?

Mr. Vernon (resignedly)—Yes, I came on purpose for it, too. Well, I suppose I must retire, as usual. I cannot compete against you.

Lord Linkshire—Oh, nonsense, you have as much right as I.

Mr. Vernon—But not as much money.

Lord Linkshire—Rot! Toss you who stands out!

Mr. Vernon—Why do you want it? You don't even collect imperials.

Lord Linkshire—No, but Miss Herries does. I know she wants a Plotina to complete a period. Next Wednesday is her birthday, and so * * * She is very enthusiasic about collecting just now.

Mr. Vernon—Yes, it was I who first started her.

Lord Linkshire (meditatively)—True, that does give you a sort of claim. On the other hand, it follows that it is entirely through you that I am here.

Mr. Vernon—Why ever did you come? If only you had written and commissioned some one you would have got the coin and this would never have happened.

Lord Linkshire—Hang it, Vernon! leave one a bit of sentiment. Why not get one's engagement ring on approval through the Exchange and Mart?

Mr. Vernon—Right, old man; but how curious that it should be the sport of fate that we two should always be rivals for what is best and most beautiful. First Helena Harries; now the Plotina.

Lord Linkshire (in a burst of generosity)—Vernon, I have Helena; you shall have the Plotina.

Mr. Vernon—No, Jack, it must not be. I cannot allow such a sacrifice. And if I deprived Helena of it I could never meet her again. But when I think of her exquisite profile almost untouched by the rude hand of man, defying age and—

Lord Linkshire—Vernon!

Mr. Vernon—I refer to Plotina, of course. Well, I will go back to my trouts; you must buy the aureus and take it to Helena, and perhaps she—

Lord Linkshire—Vernon, she shall know how nobly you have behaved.

Mr. Vernon—That's enough; we are both acting for her happiness alone. Come on; he's going to begin.

(They take seats at the baize-covered table; the auctioneer mounts his rostrum and the earlier lots are disposed of.)

Auctioneer—Lot 18. Here, gentlemen, we have a brilliant and exceedingly rare gold piece of Plotina. Kindly put it in the bidding. What may I say? Twelve, ten, eight pounds?

Mr. Wilkins—Five.

Lord Linkshire—Guineas.

(The bidding goes desultorily on until twenty pounds is reached, when all except Mr. Wilkins and Lord Linkshire have dropped off.)

Auctioneer—Any advance on twenty? A very fine and rare example; you may not have another such chance for years. Going at twenty; no advance? (Brings down hammer sharply.) Twenty pounds, Lord Linkshire.

Mr. Wilkins (excitedly)—I bid twenty pounds.

Auctioneer — Twenty pounds was Lord Linkshire's bid. I particularly looked at you, but you never spoke.

Mr. Wilkins—Of course not. I understood that you had taken the twenty pounds as mine. I certainly said it.

Auctioneer — Very well. Did any gentleman hear Mr. Wilkins' twenty? If so, he has the privilege of continuing the bidding.

Lord Linkshire (after a moment's pause)—Yes, I did—confound it! —I

"THE PURCHASER IS A LADY."

nodded and thought that you took mine as guineas.

Mr. Wilkins (with alacrity)—Twenty-five pounds.

Mr. Vernon (sotto voce to Lord Linkshire)—Quixotry!

Lord Linkshire—No, you forget. This Cæsar's wife must be above suspicion. (Aloud) Thirty.

Mr. Wilkins—Forty.

Lord Linkshire—Fifty.

Mr. Wilkins (visibly pale)—Sixty.

Lord Linkshire (elaborately flicking a speck off his coat)—Seventy.

Mr. Vernon (sotto voce to Lord Linkshire)—Let the lunatic have it if he must; it doesn't greatly matter.

Mr. Wilkins—Eighty.

Lord Linkshire (sotto voce)—Nonsense. (Aloud) Ninety.

Mr. Wilkins—A hundred.

Mr. Vernon (sotto voce)—This is simply madness. Let him buy it, and if you must have it give him his twenty per cent. on it afterwards.

Auctioneer (looking at Lord Linkshire)—One hundred pounds. Any advance?

(Lord Linkshire shakes his head and the hammer falls. The sale continues somewh at flat after this. Afterwards)

Mr. Wilkins—I am much obliged to your lordship. It was quite a mistake, for, as you know, I certainly did bid, and I particularly wanted the coin.

Lord Linkshire—So do I. I want diet to complete a series, and I thought that perhaps you could sell it to me.

Mr. Wilkins—I'm very sorry to disappoint your lordship, but we had a commission, and, curiously enough, our client mentioned that it was to complete a series, also.

Lord Linkshire—And wanted to complete it pretty badly, I should say, judging from the latitude you had.

Mr. Wilkins—Well, it was considerably above our own estimate, but it was an open commission, and your lordship's judgment in these matters is so good that we couldn't be going far wrong in following your lead.

Lord Linkshire (hopefully)—Perhaps, after all, your client might prefer to sell on hearing the price. Are you at liberty to give me his name?

Mr. Wilkins—Certainly, Lord Linkshire; there could be no objection to that, but it isn't a "he" at all. The purchaser is a lady.

Lord Linkshire } —A lady!
Mr. Vernon }

Mr. Wilkins—Yes, we bought for Miss Herries.—Black and White.

RACE FEDERATION.

The Probable Result of Bringing All the English-Speaking People Together.

If it is possible to solidify the English-speaking people on some such lines as you indicate, the final question is: What would be the gain to them and to mankind?

To all intents and purposes war would by degrees die out from the face of the earth—it would become impossible. The armed camp, which burdens the old world, enslaves the nations and impedes progress, would disappear. If you had the Anglo-Saxon race acting on a common ground they could determine the balance of power for a fully peopled earth. Such a moral force would be irresistible, and argument would take the place of war in the settlement of international disputes. Why, if there was a race great enough by a single word to prevent it, should any two nations throw the world into disorder, by fighting with each other? If the arbitrament of reason takes the place of the arbitrament of war, it will at once be seen what a new and noble world is unveiled.

Substantially the fighting machinery of the old world—the arsenals and the battalions—have been kept out of the new. But mutterings sometimes threaten, which excite the young nations of the new world to think they must prepare means for their own defense against some of the nations of the old. Therefore, unless Anglo-Saxon union is realized, the doubt arises whether war can long be kept out of the new world; so, you see, unity makes for the prevention of war in the old, and obviates any probable causes of war in the new. An element not fully dreamed of, which is being introduced, will immensely strengthen the federation idea. The influence of woman, now coming to be a real factor in the world, will tend, probably as much as any other cause, to make nations unwilling to plunge into scenes of bloodshed and useless destruction of life and property. That will be a blessed assistance toward the peace of the world in this time of excitement, and so a bulwark for federation, which is the creator of peace.—Contemporary Review.

This pudding is sometimes covered with a crust.—Leeds Mercury.

Put the juice in a preserve kettle with a pound of sugar and a slice of thin lemon peel. Set on the fire, let come to a boil. Skim, pare and core a dozen good cooking apples, drop into the sirup and let boil very gently until tender. Take up carefully, without breaking, on a perforated skimmer, and set aside to cool. —St. George's Cake: Take three-quarters of a pound of well-dried flour and mix in it a teaspoonful of baking-powder with a pinch of salt. Cream two ounces of lard and two ounces of butter with five ounces of castor sugar, then beat in three yolks of eggs; sift the flour gradually into this. Then add four ounces of currants, and the same amount of chopped raisins. Chop two ounces of citron, and add to the cake. Beat all together for five minutes, and flavor with a small teaspoonful each of powdered ginger and cinnamon. Just before placing in the oven, add the whites of the three eggs, beaten to a stiff froth. Bake from one and a half to two hours.—Leeds' Mercury.

—Veal Terrapin: Cut cold veal in dice; to one pint add six eggs boiled for fifteen minutes and cut fine. Sprinkle with pepper and salt. Add a tablespoonful of minced lemon peel, or a little grated nutmeg, or a small half-teaspoonful of sweet marjoram or summer savory, according to the flavor desired. Allow one cup of cream or cream sauce to each pint of meat; let it come to the boil; heat all together and serve hot. To make cream sauce put one tablespoonful of butter into a graniteware saucepan; when melted add two tablespoonfuls of flour and let it cook, stirring to prevent browning. When perfectly smooth pour in slowly one pint of milk. Let it boil for two minutes.—Ladies' Home Journal.

COMFORT IN SUMMER.

Much Depends on What Goes Into the Stomach.

If people understood how much of the physical suffering incident to protracted seasons of hot weather is due to the food they eat there would be more common sense used in the selection of diet.

It is not at all uncommon to see in any of the city restaurants men plying fans industriously with one hand, while with the other they convey to their mouths roast beef with a greasy, rich gravy, potatoes heavily buttered, or pork and beans. Having filled their stomachs with a heavy charge, they go out into the heated air and wonder why they suffer so intolerably from the heat. If they loaded the furnaces in their houses with fuel and applied fire to it they would not wonder why the house was uncomfortably warm. Yet they will do a similar thing to their bodies and then wonder and suffer and groan.

In hot weather two things ought to be avoided to insure comfort and health—food and drink that are stimulating or are rich in carbon or nitrogen. Any person can subsist on about one-half the food in the summer that is required in the winter, and the summer diet should consist chiefly of vegetables, fruits, milk and the farinaceous foods. Fish should take the place of beef. Pork should be wholly discarded. Milk can be used in place of veal. Spring lamb is always wholesome. Macaroni, the various preparations of wheat, farina, toast, asparagus, custards, fruits and the scores of similar delicacies, with some light meat, like lamb, tongue, chicken or fish, once a day should constitute the daily food.

A little common sense lies at the bottom of all physical comfort in these torrid days, and comfort is a more important factor in good health than is generally understood.—Chicago Record.

Pineapple Cream.

To one pint of cream, whipped stiff and sweetened with a large cup of sugar, add half a box of gelatine prepared as for cocoanut cream. A tiny pinch of salt is an improvement. Scrape one pineapple with silver fork until it is in fine shreds and add it to the cream. If the fresh fruit can not be obtained the canned answers very well. The contents of one can is used. If the pineapple is in slices it must be cut into very small pieces. The mold must be set on ice to stiffen.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Couldn't Account for It.

"Here!" snarled the transient to the landlord of the country hotel, who, for the moment, had laid off his imperial robes and was waiting on the table, "bring me a glass of good water—there's something ails this stuff."

"It ought to be healthy water," the landlord softly made reply, peering critically into the pitcher; "it was drawn in a well bucket."

Amid the deathlike silence that ensued the butter got down from the table and stalked indignantly out of the room.—N. Y. Recorder.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

THE GROUND CHERRY.

Its Value as a Fruit Is Just Beginning to Be Appreciated.

With many farmers the ground cherry is classed among the weeds, as it grows wild in many parts of the central and western states. Its value as a fruit has not been generally appreciated and until the past few years it was seldom seen in cultivation. An improved variety is now finding its way in our seedmen's catalogues, and there is no doubt that it will grow rapidly in favor. With me the improved ground cherry has proven itself worthy of a place in the garden. The plant is quite hardy, and will thrive on any soil where potatoes will grow. The fruit when the husk has been removed is a handsome yellow cherry of about three-fourths of an inch in diameter. It has something of a strawberry flavor, and is excellent for sauce, pies, or preserves. For winter use the fruit may be canned or dried. Or if kept in a cool place in its husk the cherry will keep plump and sound until December, or later.

In growing ground cherries about the same method is pursued as in growing tomatoes. The seeds are sown in hotbeds, and the young plants are not taken to the garden until danger of frost is past. The plants are very branching, most of the branches taking a lateral direction, almost touching the ground. For this reason they should be set not less than four feet apart each way. There is need of extra care in keeping down the weeds during the first half of the season, for later on the plants are in the way of such work. The ground cherry is wonderfully prolific. The first ripe ones are gathered about the first of August. After this the fruit may be picked every two or three days until cut off by frost. The fruit drops off as soon as it is ripe, so the most of the picking is done from the ground. On good soil one may expect to get a bushel from 18 or 20 plants, or from 130 to 150 bushels per acre.—American Agriculturist.

WATERING VEGETABLES.

Be Sure to Apply the Water to the Roots and Not the Leaves.

It may be necessary to water the vegetable plants before the end of the season, but avoid it as long as possible. One watering makes a second one necessary, and it must be continued until the necessity ceases. If the plants are well advanced or full grown a generous supply of water twice a week is better than a sprinkling every day. Do not use cold water on the plants. Fill a barrel full of water and let it stand in the sun a day or two, and it will then be about the right temperature. Apply the water to the roots and not on the leaves.

A good plan is to follow the watering pot with the hoe, throwing a little dry soil around the plants. This will prevent the surface from crusting over and the soil will keep moist much longer.

Young vegetable plants should be watered every evening, if the weather is dry, until the roots get a strong hold of the soil. The watering should be carefully done. Aim to keep a moist condition of the soil but avoid saturation while the roots are tender. After the plants have a good start the watering may be less frequent and a greater supply given at a time.

If your young plants are not doing well revive them and hasten growth by using a liquid manure prepared as follows: Fill a tub or barrel half full of raw stable manure and fill the receptacle full of water. The manure will absorb the water and more must be added when necessary. Let stand in the sun twenty-four hours, then dip off the liquid and apply to the plants. This is an excellent preparation for flowers, roses, etc. Quickness of growth is essential to the quality and tenderness of any vegetable.—Dola Fay, in Farm, Stock and Home.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

STRAWBERRY plants that grow best this season bear best next year.

GOOD crops of fruit cannot be grown on starved soil.

THE quickest and most satisfactory results from ashes are usually obtained on a sandy soil.

ONE of the best varieties, if not the best, of fruit trees for roadside planting is the cherry.

PROPER balance of root and top-growth is essential in the selection of trees for planting.

THE presence of ants on or about trees may be taken as a good indication that the tree is affected by disease or insects.

THE best currants are grown on wood of the previous season's growth. Do not allow too many canes to grow. Thin out the most unpromising ones.

NEVER prune the short spurs from pear trees, as all fruit is borne upon them, but remove all suckers from the body of the tree, as also all superfluous branches.

A GOOD grafting wax is made by taking four parts of resin, two parts of beeswax and one part tallow, by weight, melting all slowly together and mixing thoroughly.

IN many situations where growing of any kind of cultivated crops would be impossible the growing of tree fruits could readily be made profitable—more so than almost anything else.

THE summer pruning of raspberries should consist mainly of pinching out the growing point of each cane when it reaches the height of about three feet. This causes branches to start out below.

YOUNG grafted trees should be looked after now. Sprouts will often start up from the stock and if allowed to grow will rob the grafts. Go over them carefully and rub them off.—St. Louis Republic.

GINSENG CULTURE.

According to a Well-Known Texan, It Pays Exceedingly Well.

Low prices of farm products and kindred ills are having a depressing effect upon the minds of cultivators of the soil, and thoughtful men are now more than ever before considering how and what crops to grow for profit.

In such trying periods, believing that much good is sometimes accomplished by directing attention to new channels of industry, I herewith present some suggestions for the benefit of any who may feel disposed to test them. In 1870, while living at Little Rock, Ark., I wrote a few articles for the local press calling attention to the adaptation of her soil and climate to fruit culture. I also engaged in it myself and was the first man who ever shipped a grape from that state to a northern market. It is now a great satisfaction to me to say I have lived to see her fruit interest developed until it is probably worth millions of dollars annually. Again, since I have been a citizen of this state, I called attention to the pecan nut in connection with nut culture, and, aided by some more able minds, we gave an impetus to nut culture that will ultimately prove of value to some people in nearly every state in the union and to quite a number in foreign lands.

But the object of this letter is to call attention to ginseng culture. This little plant is adapted to a wider range of soil and climate than any other one thing I know of. It is a beautiful plant; no prettier thing was ever put in a flower pot. Its golden leaves in autumn; its creamy white blossoms, followed by spikes of fiery red seed pods, renders it a very striking thing. Florists should all grow it as a pot plant; it would add much beauty to a garden border and would flourish on the shady side of a spreading rose or shrub, and as a field crop its capabilities are simply immense. I plant one foot apart each way, say forty-four thousand plants per acre, then mulch the entire surface to a depth of four or five inches and the field work is done. I never cultivate or stir the soil in any way. At three years the plants commence to bear seed, and the older they get the more seed they bear; it would pay well at present as a seed crop alone. The seed would fetch almost any price one would ask; they are worth their weight in gold. At four years the roots are considered sufficiently matured to dig. About twenty-five well grown roots will make a pound when dry, and the price is from two dollars to three dollars and a half per pound. In view of the fact that the plant is yearly getting scarcer and the price advancing and likely to do so for many years, it occurs to me that any careful cultivator of average intelligence could add greatly to his income by judicious planting and management of this crop.—L. D. Shrewsbury, Sherman, Tex., in Western Rural.

NEW JERSEY'S ROADS.

Many Miles Were Macadamized Under the Township Bonding Act.

Before state or county aid was extended for the construction of stone roads in New Jersey the farmers of Chester, Burlington county, got the notion they would bankrupt themselves if they put down macadam roads. Two citizens knew differently and offered to build the roads for $3,400 per mile. Farmers believed stone roads would cost $6,000 or $7,000 per mile. Finally the town was bonded for $40,000 for 10 miles of roads. To carry the election in favor of bonding, outlying roads were included, making 11¾ miles. The two citizens brought the stone by rail many miles, carted it overland in wagons, took as salary $1,000 for the four months' job, returned $225 to the town treasury and built the 11¾ miles of road. The cost was $3,460 per mile, and all the stone hauled long distances, the biggest item of cost. These roads were built 3 years ago and have not been repaired since except to be rolled each spring by a 3 ton horse roller. The bonds are paid at the rate of $1,000 per year and the burden of taxation is insignificant. Nearly all the farmers use narrow tire wagons, although engineers say they should use wide tires. A load or 4 tons, including weight of wagon, is common. The builder recommended an expenditure of $50 per year on each mile, but to-day with narrow tires and heavy loads there is no perceptible evidence of wear.—Bulletin 9, Office of Road Inquiry.

GARDEN WHEELBARROW.

Splendid Device for Carting Plants from One Place to Another.

During the season of plant setting a light barrow is a convenient help in carting the plants from the greenhouse or frames to the garden or field. In many cases we have much soil on the roots of plants. On an ordinary wheelbarrow the plants are subjected to many jars and often hard knocks, which are liable to loosen the soil and perhaps shake it all off. A correspondent suggests the device here illustrated as meeting the objection. The two pieces on which the box rests should be of white ash or hickery, giving the box when loaded an easy spring. The advantages of this contrivance are easily understood, and the whole construction is too plain to need lengthy description. Flats containing tomato, pepper, and egg plants, etc., may be loaded right into the box and carted to the field without much shaking.—American Gardening.

Fine Words Butter No Parsnips.

"Roads are the connecting links that bind communities together in unity of spirit. They are the ways by which men have advanced and will ever advance who wish to leave some worthy memorial to posterity." — Fudge. Roads are roads, and the majority of them mighty mean ones. They may be the connecting links, but if all the links of life were of a like character the connection wouldn't amount to much, and would be mud at that. Roads are like communities, and are what the people make them. True, the world was not made in a day, and all things had a beginning; but sometimes one thinks, in traveling over our country roads, "this is a pretty old beginning," and "a tough one, too."—Colman's Rural World.

HETEROPHEMY.

An Awkward Trick for Which the Tongue or Nerves Are Responsible.

Heterophemy, the curious disease which consists in using one word when meaning to use an entirely different one, gives rise to many amusing combinations. An old lady living in a town on the Hudson river is thus afflicted. She is tall and stately in appearance, courtly and gracious in manner, and this makes her incongruous sentences all the more ridiculous. Strange to say, she herself is totally unconscious of her infirmity, for the family, friends, and even the servants endeavor to save her from the mortification she would feel.

Not long ago, when she was recovering from a serious illness, the bishop of the diocese chanced to be making his annual visitation, and at the suggestion of the rector, they went together to call upon Mrs. Drew.

She was delighted to see them, and entertained them with her usual grace and cordiality. The conversation naturally touched upon her illness, and her thankfulness at her recovery, which for a time had been despaired of.

Presently she turned to the bishop, saying earnestly, "My dear bishop, let us have a little drop."

The startled prelate glanced at the rector. He, knowing his old friend's infirmity, cast about in his mind for her probable meaning.

"Bishop," repeated the old lady, seriously, "let's have a little drop."

"Certainly, Mrs. Drew," interposed the rector, waiting for her to make some move which might disclose her meaning. But Mrs. Drew waited expectantly, also.

"If you have not your Vade Mecum with you, there is a prayer-book," she said, after a moment.

The rector, with a sigh of relief, turned to the bishop. "Mrs. Drew will be glad to have you read prayers with her," he said quietly.

Prayers were read, and then the gentlemen prepared to take leave.

"Your visit has been a pleasure," Mrs. Drew said warmly. "Now, Mr. Belknap, won't you take this little boy home to your dear wife, with my best love?"

For a moment Mr. Belknap wondered if she could mean the bishop, but she relieved his mind by lifting a magnificent bunch of roses from a vase on the table.

Allied to this is another form of misspeech, to which most of us are occasionally subject—the exchange of syllables. A certain young lady, who, to her intense mortification, often reverses her vowels thus, says she is entirely unconscious of it, even after speaking.

One summer evening she was sauntering with a friend toward the village post office of the little town where they were staying. On the way they encountered an acquaintance with a handful of letters.

"Ah, good evening," she said in her peculiarly gracious, suave manner. "Are you strailing out for your mole?"

The mystified young woman made some inarticulate reply and passed on. As soon as the friend could recover her gravity she gasped: "I suppose you intended to ask Miss May if she was strolling out for her mail?"

The same young lady was relating a sad story of various misfortunes which had overwhelmed a dear friend.

"Think," she concluded pathetically, "of losing husband, children, property and home at one swell foop!" And a howl of laughter rent the roof.—Atlantic.

GREAT BOOK FREE.

When Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., published the first edition of his work, The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, he announced that after 680,000 copies had been sold at the regular price, $1.50 per copy, the profit on which would repay him for the great amount of labor and money expended in producing it, he would distribute the next half million free. As this number of copies has already been sold, he is now distributing, absolutely free, 500,000 copies of this complete, interesting and valuable common sense medical work ever published—the recipient only being required to mail to him, at the above address, this little COUPON with twenty-one (21) cents in one-cent stamps to pay for postage and packing only, and the book will be sent by mail. A Real Journey.

Perhaps a couple of decades ago it was that Jules Verne, that ingenious juggler with geographical facts and scientific probabilities (and impossibilities) described in vivid style the supposed voyage of a wonderful submarine vessel driven by electricity. A faint shadow of his gorgeous picture has been given us by some electrically guided torpedo boats, but the story still remains a fancy rather than even a probability. However romantic it might be to voyage "twenty thousand leagues under the seas," were that a possibility, it would be far more profitable and interesting to take a journey of seven thousand miles (and return) through the prosperous and populous states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Montana, observing their varied climate, their industrious people, their growing cities and towns, studying their resources in crops, timber and mines, and noting what has been done in a generation to transform the wilderness into a cultivated country, the home of nearly fifteen millions of people. The traveler would return with his mind stored with material for a score of books, and could choose history, statistics or poetry as his themes. Such a journey could be made by taking a trip over the lines of the Burlington Route, which traverses or penetrates all the states named above, and reaches nearly all their principal cities. Your home ticket agent can supply you with tickets via this route to Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, and hundreds of other places East, South and West. ## DELANO DIARY

—Plenty of rain is falling now-a-days to satisfy the moft distrustful farmers. Corn is expected to be an unusually heavy crop.

—Nick Schwirtz, the poor old man who has been so shamefully abused by some of the thoughtless of the village for weeks past, has been sent to the Asylum for Insane.

—Crow River is extremely low this season; if it continues for five years to dry up as fast as it has in the past decade there will be very little to show where once did flow the raging Crow.

—S. S. Breed is now selling off some of his Delano property; the courts having granted him permission to do so. There is talk of the village purchasing the picnic grounds for park purposes.

—The village has had William Lewis lots surveyed, prepatory to grading the sidewalk and lots, and terracing the latter. Mr. L. will have one of the finest places in town, and can look down on his neighbors.

—Quite a lot of new wheat has been marketed here, already. Farmers prefer to sell enough of there grain to pay debts and meet running expenses to hoarding it away while they go in debt for every thing they want.

—It is not positively known but suspicions have been aroused that there will, in the near future be a resignation from the School Board. Reasoning from precident we would say the suspicions are well founded.

—The Presbyterian congrigation have decided to erect about a $1,000 church in place of the one burned a few weeks ago. The building committee is Rev, T. Daules, E. S. Babb, C. W. Ingerson, Miss Mary Sherry and T. M. Shaw.

—A meeting of citizens is to be held at the City Hall on Tuesday evening, Aug. 13, to discuss the advssability of prchasing a park. Be on band; one man has as much right to his opinions as another in these matters.

—A car load of watermellons was switched off at this place, on Saturday, and many of them sold to merchants who quickly disposed of them to customers. George Cunningham took 110 big ones to Watertown where he soon sold them at a profit.

—Phil Martin claims to be the boss bee hunter in this section of country. He says he can find, on an average, a bee tree a day; one day he found two; five in all. He thinks of keeping up the business for awhile, he says the woods are full of them.

—The entertainment in the City Hall, last night, was enjoyed by all. The views were especially fine, and gave people an idea of the far west. The lecturer did justice to his subjects. The trip from Niagara to Alaska is well worth what it costs.

—The game of base ball between the Waverly Picketts and the Delamo Crickets, on the grounds of the latter, Tuesday afternoon was witnessed by quite an audience and proved interesting but considerably one sided. The boys gave the visitors their supper at the Danforth House after playing a game of 22 to 0 in favor of the Delano Crickets.

—C. J. Buckley for so many years an employe and local editor of the Delano Eagle left yesterday for St. Paul, where he intends going into Standard Printing Company's employ. We understand he will move his family to the Saintly City soon. Joe will be missed, as will his family from their long familiar haunts. May success and happiness attend them in their new venture is the wish of their many Delano friends.

—Several daily newspaper men, of Minneapolis, were in town, yesterday, looking after the interests of their respective papers.

—Rev. T. Davies will preach next Sunday morning in the Swedish church. Subject, Some imperfections of the Old Testament religion.

—With a new "financier" of modern views at the helm on the Schol Board, people may now look for the "Sinking fund" to help pay off the "Jumbo" debt on the district. Day begins to dawn.

—The public Schools will open in about a month with Prof. Chas. S. Hawker as principal. The boys and girls are already counting on putting in a good winters work and on receiving a fine lot of State certificates next spring. Let the work go on.

—A report was circulated around town that one of a party of four young men ehat went west from here to harvest had met with an accident resulting in the loss of a foot. The young men's parents disclame any knowledge of such an accurance and entirely discredit it.

—We notice that our merchants are stocking up again in most lines of goods: they seem to have faith in the big crops our farmers are harvesting to help them get money to pay for the goods. Most everything in the manufactured line is bringing higher prices than they have for a long time.

—Potatoes are plenty this year in this neighborhood. A farmer a few miles from town who has raised large crops of the tubor for many years and thinks he is posted on the probable prices, tried a few days since, to dis-dispose of his entire crop, the product of four acres, at 15 cts per bushel on his farm.

—Notwithstanding the anouncement of the Eagle, sometime ago that the Delano Mayor was likely to resign and the evident wish in that quarter that he would, he still holds the fort and satisfies his constituency about as well as the ardent wisher who is on the sheet committee with him.

—At a meeting of the Board of Education held last Saturday evening an entire re-organization took place. That was a step in the right direction. The officers are now, President, F. H. Lindsley; Secretary, C. H. Vorse. and Treasurer, J. E. Borsch. The other members of the Board are L. M. Maxffeld, W. H. Frazee, and I. Gutzwiller, Jr.

—On Sunday one of the finest rains of the season fell. As farmers had completed stacking and were ready for it, it was highly appreciated. Pasturage, potatoes, corn and gardens were much benefited and the dust that was getting pretty thick was effedually settled. Rain barrels that were empty were again filled, and the paovident housewife made happy.

Mistake Corrected.

The Waverly Correspondent for the Howard Lake Herald, in mentioning the ball game between the Waverly Picketts and Delano Crickets, says the score was 16 to 20 in favor of the Crickets. The correspondent made a great mistake, as the score was 22 to 0 in favor of the Delano boys.

County Cullings.

Editor Eaton, we understand, is being powerfully pestered by applicants for post masterships, in case he goes to Congress next term.

One of the attractions at the State Fair from Sept. 9 to 14 will be the Farmer's Institute. A tented city will be provided for their accommodation so they can camp on the grounds. It is proposed to make this one of the most instructive as well as entertaining fairs yet held. Wright county farmers should be well represented; and they should receive their share of premiums, as well as fun and knowledge.

The Republican bees are already swarming at the county seat. It looks as if some of the tricksters had flushed the game, and as if some office hunters are doomed to disappointment. This way of leaders of several parties going "snucks," and dividing the spoils has been practiced about long enough in Wright county, and in case it is kept up longer, will likely, be met by the people in solid phalanx at the polls, at the next opportunity.

The W. C. T. U. seems te keep up its organization in Wright county; and to do some very active work. They have arranged for a speaker one week each year to aid them in their work. If they would hold frequent meetings in every village and school district through the county during the year they could advance their cause materially. These meetings might be under the direction of one, two or more of thetr members and local talent in which our county abonds could be secured to interest and instruct the audiences that would gather at a weeks notice in each town.

In last week's GAZETTE in replying to one of the Eagle's remarks about our criticisms of the "financiering" of the Delano School Board, we said: "the figures on the school debt are so familiar to people in the district after 12 years that they can not be juggled very well by any one." We have to thank the Secretary, Mr. Maxfield, for pointing out to us that in that same [illegible] a "6" got into the place of a [illegible] we intended to say, and, "0". Wh[illegible] us different, supposed we had said, and what is well known to the patrons of the [illegible]istrict, was: "After faithful promises time and again that the entire debt would be wiped out before due, after ten years $10,000 of it was refunded, borrowed again, and the $2,800 is still hanging on to show the ability of the financiers." Thus the district is seen to be still in debt in the amount of $12,800.00. It has required an enormous amount of money to keep the interest paid for the past twelve years, and is still crippleing our school by taking so much from the taxes raised to pay interest that is needed for running expenses. The Board re organized last Saturday night, and it is now hoped that the "financiering" will be strictly in accordance with law.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the ntler sex, every one of whom should subscribe to morest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and u will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put u in the way of saving money by finding in one agazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of e whole family.

REMARKS ON THE WEATHER.

There ain't no use growlin' 'bo it the weather —yet we will.
If you give a man just what he likes you'll find him growling still;
There ain't no way o'pleasing him—there ain't no use to try.
So that's why they run the business like they want to in the sky
When it's summer he's wishin' it was winter —mad and grum.
Jes' prayin' for the frosty winds and icicles to come;
And when he gets his winter he's for summer, and that's why.
They kinder run the business like they want to in the sky.
—Chicago Mail.

THE Omaha A. P. A. difficulty has by agreement been left to to the courts to decide.

EDITORS McDonold and Eastman, of St. Cloud, are having a wordy woolly war. Just at present the former seems to have filled the latters eyes so full of wool that he can't see where to go next, and the price is still rising.

THE ATWATER REPUBLICAN is among our newest exchange. The editor, Marion P. Satterlee, is a forcible writer, shooting straight for the bulls eye every time, much as did his illustrious father. Though the Republican's politics will, likely not suit us, we expect brother S. will give Atwater a lively paper.

EDITOR Stivers of the Brainerd Journal evidently believes in the good old democratic doctrine of "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none," and proposes to see that the preaching is kept in practice so far as he can, in his town at least, and that the Salvation army people are givin an equal chance to ask sinners to turn to the Lord and be saved, with the traveling fakers who are beguiling innocent youth and honest people into all sorts of games to get their money. Stay with them Brother Stivers.

THE Penny Press, of Wednesday, contained a letter from Hon. John P. Rea, on the financial situation he sums up as follows: "As long as gold monometallism exists, so long the syndicate can corner all the redemption money we possess in any 24 hours; and not only rob the masses of their wealth, but control their government as well.

There is one avenue of relief, but one vesta through which hope comes, and that is in the restoration of silver to the place it occupied in our financial system befor 1873; and the return, not to 'sound' but to 'honest' money."

T. J. MCDERMOTT, Esq. has been mentioned as a possible candidate for Governor, on the Democratic ticket next fall. T. J. is one of those rising young Democrats who believe implicitly that the office should seek the man, otherwise how could he be a follower of Thomas Jefferson? He also, of course, believes that when the man is sought, he should accept honors, at the hands of his friends. We don't believe Mr. McDermott is going to resort to tricks and trades for the chance of running for the higest office in the State, but if the Democrats, in convention assembled, see fit to place his name at the head of the ticket we don't believe he will flinch from the responsibilities; but will do his utmost in an honorable and upright way to be elected to an office which he would fill with honor to himself and the satisfaction of his constituency.

Political Pother.

It may seem a trifle early for politics, but when you sound the leading politicians of our state you will find that the kettle is already on. That simmering has begun. That candidates are even now being picked out; that a plan of warfare, and a battle cry, are now being worked up. Each party's manipulators are at it in earnest. From present appearances the financial questions will be kept as much as possible in the background by the two old parties, while the Populists will have that for their chief object in life. The Republicans will have a terrible time with Knute Nelson and Clough folks and the Bill Washburn, and the Gov. Mc Gill and other factions to "harmonize." To say nothing of the Harrison, Mc Kinley, Reed imbrogho they will have lots to talk about. The Democrats seem to be going into the campaign with a determination to win. Under their new leader, T. J. McDermott, they begin to get some enthusiasm. Chairman McDermott has a fine new picture of Thomas Jefferson, hung in his office, where he makes headquarters, from which he draws inspiration. As long as he continues to follow in the footsteps of his illustrious namesake, he will be a faithful and safe leader. The party may well take courage.

The Populists are stirring up all the silver strife they can and hope to win on that issue. It seems to be Donnelly against the field, for everything, he to rake in all the big dollars that he possibly can.

The Prohibitionists, it appears, will advocate the local option by counties plan, and streneously work to do away with the saloon license in every form.

Between all these we are apt to have for national issues, Republicans, protection; Democrats, free trade; Populists, free silver; Prohibitionists, free liquor, or none. There is a chance for everybody to get a platform with about one plank on which they can stand firmly. But most of the platforms are liable to be pretty frail affairs, and the more planks they contain the more need there will be for voters to stick to the one single plank they feel safe on.

Keep an eye out for the intrigues, trades and bargains, between opposing parties, and try if you can to not be sold out to anybody.

Business Outlook.

At the present time the outloook is that people living in Minnesota will have an adundance of eatables; that they need not starve; but may grow corpulent with little effort, but that so far as money goes, it seems as hard as ever; nay even harder to get hold of. With a surplus of the products of the farm on hand, the farmer finds no satisfactory market. For several years, potatoes, one of the chief articles of food has commanded a high price; in fact at times could hardly be got. They were hard to raise and farmers were obliged to put in a good sized crop in order to divide with the bugs and have enough left for his family use and for seed. This year, everybody that could, planted, even in the cities the Pingree plan was practiced: the bugs failed to come after their share, those who planted are harvesting much beyond their expectations, and potatoes in St. Paul are selling for 15 and 20 cts per bushel in the market. The same to some extent is true of most products of the fields and gardens. A large crop of everything is on hand, demonstrating to a nicety that when the supply is great the price is low. Horses which four or five years ago, would sell for $125 to $150 apiece now sell for $40 or $50 or not at all. Lands don't seem to be changing hands at any price, to a great extent; and only where mortgages or other inconveneniencies occasion do people sell.

Last year prices were high but there was not much left on the farms to sell and little money came in, and some of that had to go for feed and for provisions, keeping farmers down to hard pan, all the time, this year it is different, every well regulated farm has to sell of most crops, and though the price is low, the money will not have to be paid out for what they now have at home, consequently times will be better. People with plenty are happy and can afford to enjoy themselves even though money is scarce. And eventually the Pingaree people in the cities will have exhausted their potato crops and other circumstances will have been brought about making a market for what we have. Don't fool away a thing. Save the crop, no difference how much surplus there is, take care of it; somebody will want it at some price, and the man that has his salable articles in the best shape is the first man to meet with a market, usually, and at better prices than he that neglects taking proper care of what he has. On the whole, people may look, through the blessings bestowed by a kind providence, for better times.

Not Our Kind of Politics.

If Cleveland's portrait is hung in the Bank of England it is liable to be turned to the wall in this country. Hank Watterson has already given it a twist.—Minneapolis Times.

The above quotation, though possibly not intended to do so, brings to mind the tricks made use of by some over zealous republicans, in the late national combat over the tariff for protection policy, and in which the O. Z. P's, were badly worsted. Mr. Watterson in his reported interview made no remarks that would lead one to think he opposed the nomination of Mr. Cleveland, simply because he was liked in England. Mr. Watterson doesn't seem to us to be that kind of a politician. He is said to have stated that "I have no idea President Cleveland considers the idea of another nomination, but if by any concatenation of miracle, Mr. Cleveland should be the nominee he would not carry a county in the United States. There was never more gallant men than the immortal "306" who stood for Grant in that historic convention at Chicago, and when they failed of success it was never to be erased, that a third term is repugnant to the people of the United States. Cleveland, I repeat, would not carry a civil precinct of the country." In saying this, Mr. Watterson simply voiced the sentiment of a large majority of the people of all kind, who do not wish to see old customes trampled under foot for any man or any of men.

We do not approve of politics that has no argument for its principles but that they are opposed to somebody else's politics; nor of parties that have no principles but to oppose what is recommended by England or any other place whether it is right or wrong. Right principles should be supported, and wrong ones condemned, whoever may be opposed to this doctrine.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9, 1895.

Senator Gorman is evidently letting the other fellows do all the worrying about the situation in Maryland. He has gone for his usual August stay at Saratoga. He was in Washington just before starting, and said: "The ticket is first-class in every respect, and the democratic party is to be congratulated. The trifling objections that are being raised against it are no more than were to be expected. The truth is there is less objection than I expected, and much less than has often arisen before when tickets were named, and the party majority has been larger than usual when the votes were counted. I anticipate no more than the usual amount of difficulty in carrying on the campaign, and look for a good majority for Mr. Hurst and the other nominees. There must always be disappointments in politics, but the party in the end will get together and win, as usual. I have no fear whatever of the result in November. Long before that time all real democrats will be united for the common cause."

Comptroller Bowler has heard the arguments in favor of the constitutionality of the sugar bounty, and against his assumption of the authority to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress, but he has not announced his intentions. From what has been learned from other sources it will not be surprising should he, because of his doubt of the constitutionality of the original sugar bounty clause of the Mc Kinley law, refuse to approve the payment of the money appropriated to pay sugar bounties unthe Courts have declared the law to be Constitutional.

How many of the newspapers which make a practice of misreeresenting the acts and intentions of the administration, both at home and abroad, will make public the fact that the U. S minister to China was the first representative of a foreign government to demand of China, at the time of the recent destruction of missionaries, not only reparation for damage done and the punishment of those who did it, but the fullest protection for Americans temporarily residing in China? This demand was made in June and its effect may be judged from the more recent massacre of the English missionaries, which has started the British lion to roaring at the Chinese dragon at an awful rate. In that massacre not an American was killed or injured, although they had a mission station near by that of the English who were killed. Talk is cheap, but when it comes to acts this administration is not behind that of any other in the history of the country in sretecting Americans and American interests abroad. The fairness of the republican papers in your vicinity can be judged by the way they treat this Chinese incident. It's brick houses to ginger cakes that most of them will ignore it entirely.

Secretary Morton has more than once shown that his ideas on public affairs are of the good, old Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson sort of democracy. He has just given another instance of it. Sometime ago he said to a newspaper man in regard to a proposition to pay a government bounty on agricultural products: "If it will pay to raise and export agricultural products no bounty should be given." This did not please the editor of the New York periodical for whom the interview was secured. He fixed up an answer to the Scretary's words and this week Mr. Morton received a proof of it. In reply Secretary Morton has written him a short letter, from which the following paragraph, which is a nutshell statement of the whole bounty question, is taken: "Be kind enough to explain to your readers how the bounty is to be raised to pay the producer of agricultural products for his exports, except by taxation upon the people. Has the government of the Unite States a single dollar that is not taken from the pockets of its citizens by means of taxation?" The bounty system is merely a modern application of "robbing Peter to pay Paul," and there is no doubt of its being class legislation of the most vicious kind, although it is difficult to convince those temporarily benefitted that it is.

Water Drinking.

From the Daily Lancet, of Philadelphia, we clip the following which may set some of our dispeptic, and ice water imbibing readers to thinking at least:

From present appearances the American people are rapidly proving the truth of the prophesy that this country will eventually become the home of dispeptics. Indeed, it is surprising to what an extent the drinking of water is practiced, and especially ice water. Now while the drinking of ice water, in itself, is not such a serious matter, the public ought to understand the objections which arise from the injudicious use. When a person sits down at a hotel table the first thing which the waiter brings is a large glass of ice water; frequently the glass is partly filled with ice, and of this the guest partakes freely. A shock is produced when this half-frozen liquid enters the stomach, and not until hot liquids, in the sape of soup, for example, are taken into the stomach does the delicate nervous mechanism recover. Not only is a large draught of ice water taken as a "starter," but the same is freely taken during the meal, with the result that peptic digestion is seriously delayed, and when a number of different substances have been introduced, it is but natural that fermentation or decomposition should take place, the actual digestive processes being delayed sometimes for several hours.—American Therapist.

EVERGREEN STATE.

Letter From Rev. W. H. Wilson.

WINLOCK, Wash., Aug. 7th., 1895.

EDITOR GAZETTE. Your paper comes to me each week, way out here across the Bockies, and it always seems good to get it, since I am so fully acquainted in and about Delano, you would suppose one would hardly recognize the city of Delano, with its electric light plant and new water system. Four years is not long, but it is long enough to change the small trees, planted the year I left, to quite smart trees, and I judge some changes have taken place about the old town well, the new school building, and so on. Well we are plodding along, looking after the orphans that fall into our hands from month to month, we now have eleven in the home and have placed five in homes, this year, God has been with us this year in our work, though we had to lay our boy preacher away in the early part of the year, yet the Master has been good and true to us. We are quite well. My dear wife who you know not to be very strong, still is my right hand man, sometimes, when we can hardly tell where we are going to get our next sack of meal from, to feed the fatherless, a prayer of faith and then effort, brings the meal, for He has promised to feed them. We have held back from taking too many children this year because of hard times. There are several children waiting to come in. I have been waiting for some time expecting to hear from some friend from Minnesota in a small substantial way, but as yet have not. May God help us all to feed the poor destitute children of our land. I remember when Rev. Savage came to Delano in behalf of orphan children, I gave him my pulpit and after a representation of his line of work, we took $7.00 for the orphans of the state of Minnesota. I am proud of our institution when I think of the future, knowing as I do that our boys and girls of today, are to step into our places tomorrow. I feel like taking off my cap and bowing to them, when I meet them. They are not only to stand where we now stand, but are to advance into the mysterious beyond, for with advancement comes demand, Hence while our father could scarcely read in the days of the past, we are required not only to read well, but to become statesmen, and fully know, whether it would be best to have free silver or a stick with a notch cut in one side which would represent the value of what we wished. In return for the stick of wood, God help us to instruct the boys who fall into our hands to first seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness and we are promised that all these things shall be added. Please say to my friends in your paper that I think of them, and will doubtless see them in the near future.

The Great State Fair.

The annual fair under the auspices of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society will be held this year on the grounds at Hamline, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, Sept. 9th to 14th inclusive. The big crop which has been harvested in Minnesota this year is likely to contribute most to making the biggest and best in the history of the society. More interest has already been shown in the forthcoming exposition than in any previous year, and more inquiries are being made about the affair. The society offers $22000 in premiums and prizes, of which $4,000 is to be given to the raisers of cattle, and a like amount to the breeders of horses. There are liberal premiums also for the breeders of sheep and swine, and for the poultry fanciers. The big crop which Minnesota has secured is known all over the country and the prospects are that the stock raisers from all over the country will send their herds and studs to the fair, and make the exhibit a notable one. Premium list will be sent on application to E. W. Randall, Secretary. Hamline, Minn.

CORRESPONDENCE

CATHERED IN ROCKFORD.

The Advent campmeeting is in full blast. A nice tent is used for services, and found very convenient on nights as cool as was Wednesday night. Rev. O. R. Jenks, of Minneapolis, preached on that evening to a large audience. He is a good speaker.

Grandpa Benner had just returned from an extensive trip to Anoka, Elk River, and other places. He found crops generally good except wheat light, potatoes were worth 18cts per bushel at the starch factories.

J. R. Ames and I. P. Harvey are snug as two bugs in a rug, in their store. They appear to be doing their share of the business, and, like the rest of us, are expecting better times.

F. A. Johnson was loading the wagon with produce for the city; while his partner Chet, was off on a two days trip to see the bicycle races

Geo. Irving and Bert Kinney were said to be over to Wright county's metropolis, Delano, seeing the sights.

Threshing out the large harvest seems to be the principal occupation in this neighborhood.

The water in Crow River is extremely low.

Mr. Waren still holds down the corner nearest the bridge on his side of the street.

I. P. Wood is after the shadows of Rockford people now, at so much per dozen.

The meat market seems to be having a picnic these campmeeting and harvest times.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The weather is fine, the late showers having revived up old nature again, and everything is taking a heavy growth, it is thought corn and potatoes will be more than an average.

Threshing is now in order among the farming community, and grain seems to be turning out well. Wm. Pagenkopf says he threshed 80 bushels of oats to the acre, and 36 bushels of wheat to the acre, and Mr. Pagenkopf is a truthful man and one of our best citizens; so Minnesota is in the front rank with her sister states in grain raising. It looks like Minnesota will be a modern Egypt this year.

Herb Hall, of Montana, is visiting friends in our town for a few days will return last of the present month. He is in the ranch business out west.

G. W. Bradford who has been sick for a long time is improving fast.

B. R. Hosington's Leviathan threshing outfit is now in our neighborhood, it is doing fine work and is quite a courtesy to many of the inhabitants, it is a Samson for strength but a little slow on the wing, but is a mighty thresher and blower too.

The Second day Adventests are now holding their annual campmeeting at one of the Wright county villages. Rockford, under the hill. Many people from Independence attended the meeting last Sunday, and the interest seems to be good.

For two week past, the town of Independence has been sore afflicted with a couple of book agents. For a while they established head qurters at Maple Plain, and took in the surrounding country. We understand that at many places they receive a warm reception, not of the banqueting kind but rather on the antagonistic style.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.

Square Type.

Spatulated. Conical. Artistic. Philosophic. Feminine.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $850.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMORAST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft tall, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the softer sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and it will admit that by using those PHYSIOGNOMICAL HINTS it is the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

IT is said that in Japan "earthquakes are so frequent that the only attention paid to them is to stop shaving until the shock is over."

MRS. A. S. PALMER, who died at Cleveland recently, was in her youth instructor of James A. Garfield. It was she who taught the future president his alphabet.

THE dryest place in the world is that part of Egypt between the two lower falls of the Nile. Rain has never been known to fall there, and the inhabitants do not believe travelers when told that water can fall from the sky.

THE longest bridge in the world is the Lion bridge, near Saugang, China. It extends 5¼ miles over an arm of the Yellow sea, and it is supported by 300 huge stone arches. The roadway is 70 feet above the water and is inclosed in an iron network.

A MAN and his wife in Kansas spent a fortune in suing each other for divorce. After they had gotten rid of all their money they concluded to live happily together in poverty. This is a new demonstration of the theory that the way to get any satisfaction out of wealth is to spend it.

TWO MALE bicyclists dressed in knickerbockers arriving in the course of a tour at a summer hotel in Iowa the other day were not allowed to enter the dining room, on the ground that their attire was improper. It is not stated whether the table legs in the room were decorously draped.

DIVORCE has been legal in France now for eight years. The first year the number of divorces granted was 1,700; the second, 4,000; in 1894 it was 8,000; the total for the eight years is 40,000. The working classes of the cities supply the largest proportion, 47 per cent.; the peasants the smallest, 7 per cent.

PROF. CHECKLEY, of Cincinnati, believes that the health of humanity is subjected to deleterious influences by the bad habit of bathing. Does this account for the rugged health of tramps and anarchists? Personal uncleanliness as a hygienic precaution is rather startling even in this era of scientific surprises.

THERE cannot in the nature of things be much other than guerrilla warfare in Cuba. Guerrilla warfare may be made to be very wearing. Spain has had her own experience of this at Rome. It was said that in the darkest days of our own revolution Washington at one time in contemplating the possibility of defeat formed the resolution in such an event to retire into the mountains of West Virginia and prolong the contest from that standpoint.

TWO MORE great transcontinental railroads are in sight. The consolidation of the Pennsylvania Railroad company and the Burlington system, a total of 12,000 miles, will make one, and the combination proposed between the Southern Pacific and the Chesapeake & Ohio will be the other. The latter is the road C. P. Huntington sold to the Vanderbilts, he having intended to use it in connection with his Southern Pacific as a transcontinental line.

THE estimates for the German army for this year include an appropriation of 100,000 marks to supply the army with bicycles. Two wheels are to be attached to each battalion, and wheelmen are to take the place of cavalrymen for intelligence duty and mounted orderlies. It has been demonstrated that a bicycle rider can cover double the distance covered by a cavalryman in a day, and Russia, Belgium and Portugal have introduced the wheel into their armies for similar duties.

STATISTICS show that the negro race has made marvelous progress since the abolition of slavery. It now has in the United States 379 colleges and schools for higher education, 646 of the 1,175 teachers being colored. In the common schools there are 23,866 colored teachers and 1,460,477 colored pupils. The negroes also have 206 newspapers and forty-seven magazines and 250 of their number are lawyers and as many more are physicians. The wealth of the race is placed at $263,000,000. Practically all of this has been accomplished within a period of thirty years.

THE News at Middleburg, N. Y., is entitled to the credit of having given to the public the champion story of the season, though modestly crediting it to "an exchange." It says a man in the western part of the state recently undertook to mix up a nice mash for his cow, doing it in the dark. He mistook a lot of sawdust for bran. The cow meekly accepted the substitute, possibly thinking that hard times were the cause of the economy. The next morning the man milked the cow, obtaining from her half a gallon of turpentine, a quart of shoe pegs and a bundle of lath.

MR. FLINDERS PETRIE has come across a curious cemetery at Uagadah, in Upper Egypt. The people buried there are not Egyptians, for the bodies are systematically mutilated; the heads are taken off and buried after the bodies, and the larger bones are broken off at the marrow end and gnawed. The articles found belong to the latest stone age; there are stone and alabaster vases, beads, ivory and bone combs, and a great variety of pots, but no iron or bronze. Some papyri were also found, in one of which we have for the first time the complete list of the first ten Ptolemies in Greek.

IOWA DEMOCRATS.

Free Silverites Defeated in the State Convention.

J. H. Shields, a "Sound Money" Champion, Chosen as Permanent Chairman—The Ticket Synopsis of the Platform.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Aug. 9.—The sense of the delegates in the democratic state convention held here on Wednesday was twice taken on the silver question, and the party in this state is squareiy on record as opposed to free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1. The first test was indirect, both the free coinage men and the opposition having candidates for permanent chairman. J. H. Shields, of Dubuque, a champion of sound money, was chosen by a vote of 651 to 417. Later, when a direct proposition was made to substitute a free silver plank for the reaffirmation of the national financial plank of 1892 contained in the platform as it came from the committee on resolutions, the silver men again suffered defeat by a vote of 651 to 420.

JUDGE W. I. BABB.

Following is the ticket nominated:

Judge W. I. Babb, governor; S. L. Bestow, lieutenant-governor; Col. George Jenkins, railroad superintendent; I. B. Parshall, state superintendent; B. Harper, supreme judge.

The minority report of the resolutions committee was rejected and the platform as arranged by the majority was adopted. A synopsis follows:

After reaffirming the national platform adopted in Chicago in 1892 it points with satisfaction to the evidences of the wisdom of those principles in returning prosperity, restoration of wages and the reestablishment of industry. It declares as works worthy the prestige of the democratic party and of a courageous democratic administration the rescue of the country's finances from the baleful effects of the Sherman law, the repeal of the un-American federal election law and the uprooting of McKinleyism. It reaffirms that portion of the seventh plank of the last national democratic convention in regard to the use of gold and silver as money.

The platform condemns as cowardice and trickery the failure of the republican party in Iowa to meet, in its last state platform, any of the issues important and vital to the state; denounces the mulct law as unfair, imposing hardship upon property owners and as compromising the honor of the state in declaring the sale of liquor a crime and condoning the offense for a monetary consideration; demands a local option high license law, and favors a law permitting the manufacture of liquors, thus affording a market for the products of the farms and labor of the state and saving to the people the enormous sums now expended in other states; favors election of United States senators by direct vote of the people, and just and liberal pensions to deserving veterans; opposes monopolies and trusts and calls for laws for the abolition of all combines; demand a single non-partisan board of control for all state institutions, and favors speedy completion of the Hennepin canal and the deepening of waterways from the great lakes to the ocean.

All Quiet at Spring Valley.

PRINCETON, Ill., Aug. 13.—The ten extra colored policemen are still on duty at Spring Valley and the mines were in operation Saturday, about 900 men, or about one-half the force going to work. A petition was circulated Friday among the business men asking the governor to station troops in Spring Valley until the present signs of disturbances disappear but this action by the conservative people of the city is not deemed necessary at this time. Barney Rolly, the Italian who was currently reported dead Friday night, is still alive. He is in a semi-conscious condition.

Mrs. Waller to Go to Paris.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The state department Friday morning received a cablegram from Mr. Campbell, United States consul at Port Louis, Mauritius, stating that the wife of ex-Consul Waller, now in prison in France, and her four children, who arrived there last June, will be sent to Paris by him on the steamer that sails on the 20th inst. This action of Mr. Campbell was taken in compliance with instructions from the department, cabled on August 6, which were sent in view of the great interest manifested here in the case by the friends of the family.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Aug. 10.—At Logan courthouse, 50 miles south of this city, Thursday night, five men aboard of a boat playing cards had a row. ## THE CUBAN REPUBLIC.

Gen. Masso Elected President—Campos Appeals for the Rebels.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Gen. Quesada, the Cuban leader, has received letters stating that a republic had been formed at Camaquey. The delegates to the national convention at Camaquey, which has been proclaimed the temporary capital, were Dr. J. Castello, R. Porbundo, N. Sanchez, A. Aquilero and R. Mandonley. Gen. G. Masso was elected president.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Special correspondence of the World dated Havana, Cuba, Aug. 8, says: Gen. Campos has resigned the captain-generalship of Cuba. It is generally believed that he strongly urges the home government to grant the island of Cuba self-government.

As an outcome of his recent telegrams to Madrid the ministers of war, state, foreign colonies, etc., have been holding long conferences, and although they could not make public the subject of their deliberations they have admitted that they will have some astounding revelations to make soon.

All telegrams from Madrid clearly show that not only the government over there but also the people are greatly alarmed by the developments in Cuba, and that Gen. Campos' report to the cortes must be unsatisfactory. It is rumored that Gen. Campos will leave for Spain soon, as he wants to give a personal accont of the state of affairs in Cuba to the queen's court.

GRAND LODGE ENJOINED.

Decision of Much Import to German Pythians.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Judge Brentano, in the superior court Monday morning, gave Waldeck lodge Knights of Pythias authority to use the German language in its ritual. The ruling of the court, which gives in detail the history of the differences between the Waldeck lodge and the grand lodge of the state, orders the issuance of a writ of mandamus compelling the latter body to restore the charter it took from Waldeck lodge, to give back to its members something like $1,000 worth of property that was held pending the litigation and to furnish them with the password of the order, which is changed twice a year.

An injunction restraining the grand lodge from further interfering with Waldeck lodge because its members persisted in using the German language during services in the lodge-room was made permanent. Attorney Charles Anthony, of counsel for the grand lodge, declared the matter would be appealed to the supreme court. The case has been pending since last March. Many members of Waldeck lodge were present in the court room and representing the grand lodge were Grand Keeper of Records and Seal Harry Caldwell and Past Grand Chancellor Charles Burgoyne.

GOLD GOES OUT.

Heavy Withdrawal from Subtreasury at New York for Export.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The drain upon the gold reserve of the treasury of the United States, foreshadowed in these dispatches for some time past, seemed to have begun in earnest Monday when the officials were advised of the withdrawal of $1,650,000 from the subtreasury at New York for export.

This heavy withdrawal has given rise to a report that another bond issue is impending, but there is now no one in Washington who can speak authoritatively on the subject or who has information not shared by the public. The best public opinion is that the syndicate will not allow the reserve to be encroached upon until October 1, when, as generally understood, their obligation ceases. But even in the event of still further withdrawals it is believed that both Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Carlisle would see the reserve reach a point below any it has touched yet before they would take any steps to recoup it by another sale of bonds or purchase of gold.

JAPAN AND CHINA.

Provisions of the New Commercial Treaty Between Them.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Word reaches the Japanese legation that the new Japanese minister at Peking has begun the negotiation of a treaty of commerce and navigation with China. The negotiations have proceeded far enough to show that Japan will have the favored nation clause as to commerce. This will be the first time China has granted this clause to Japan. It assures to Japan the lowest rate of duty on articles sent to China that the latter country exacts from any other country. Japan is thus placed on equal terms for the first time with Great Britain, the United States and other great powers. Another feature of the new treaty is the establishment of Japanese consular courts in China for the trial of Japanese.

China Forced to Declare She Will Protect Americans.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The state department has received a reply from Minister Denby to the instructions cabled him on the 5th inst. relative to the reported looting of American missionary property at Yungfuh, near Foo Chow. Mr. Denby says he urgently represented the facts to the Tsung Li Yamen or the board of foreign affairs on the 10th and obtained instant promise of protection and redress.

JUSTICE JACKSON DEAD.

The United States Supreme Court Loses an Occupant.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 10.—At 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon Judge Howell Edmunds Jackson, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, died at his residence at past few years, but it has been only in Westmead, about 6 miles from the city, at the ripe age of 63. Judge Jackson had been in failing health for the past few years.

[Judge Howell E. Jackson was the son of a late eminent physician of Jackson, Tenn. He was born in Paris, Tenn., April 8, 1832. He graduated from the law school with the highest honors, and was a classmate of ex-Judge, now Rev. Dr. Lowe, late of Avondale Presbyterian church. His home is Westmead farm, near Nashville. His son, William H. Jackson, is engaged in the practice of law in this city, and is a candidate for the appointment to the United States district attorneyship.

Elected senator in 1881, his term did not expire until March 4, 1887, but he was appointed to the United States district court bench by President Cleveland, April 12, 1886. It is said that Mr. Cleveland would have appointed him to the supreme bench during his term as president had it not been for the fact that Mrs. Jackson was much averse to living in Washington, and so told him. He was appointed to the supreme bench in January, 1893, by President Harrison.

Judge Jackson was a whig democrat and a protectionist. He was said to have great influence with Mr. Cleveland, and his nomination by the president was considered a compliment, not only to the gentleman himself, but to Mr. Cleveland.

Judge Jackson was twice married, the first time to Miss Sophia Malloy, daughter of David B. Malloy, a banker of Memphis, who died in 1873. To this union were born four children, as follows: Henry, Mary, William H. and Howell Jackson. Henry Jackson is at present soliciting freight agent of the Southern railway, with headquarters at Atlanta. W. H. Jackson, Jr., is attorney for the Chesapeake & Ohio railway at Cincinnati. Howell Jackson is manager of the Jackson cotton mills at Jackson, Tenn. In 1876 Judge Jackson married Miss Mary E. Harding, daughter of the late Gen. Harding. Of this union three children, Misses Elizabeth and Louise Jackson, and Harding A. Jackson, survive him.]

MANY VICTIMS.

Workmen Meet Death by Collapse of a Building in New York.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—An eight-story building in course of construction north of the corner of West Third street and South Fifth avenue fell with a crash Thursday morning and a number of the workmen were carried down in the ruins. Three deaths have already occurred and a number of men are wounded.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—The horrors attending the collapse of the eight-story structure at the corner of West Broadway and West Third street Thursday were not lessened, but intensified, Friday, by the finding of three more bodies, making six dead as far as known. And to add to the calamity not all the missing have been accounted for. As a result, many anxious friends and relatives hover near the scene awaiting just a grain of hope to relieve them of the dreadful suspense. The ordeal is a fearful one, and not a few stout hearts tremble in the presence of so much distress and misery.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Three more bodies of the workmen who perished in the collapse of the building being erected at West Broadway and Third street were recovered from the ruins between midnight Saturday night and 6 o'clock Sunday evening. They were all in such a mutilated and decomposed state as to be practically unrecognizable, and were sent to the morgue unidentified. Several men are still missing.

WORK OF FLAMES.

Large Part of the Town of Lockport, Ill., Wiped Out.

LOCKPORT, Ill., Aug. 12.—This town of 3,000 people on the drainage canal, 5 miles from Joliet, had a narrow escape from destruction by flames on Saturday. The loss is probably $250,000. Two engines and two hose carts which were sent by the Chicago fire department at noon in response to the urgent appeal for help, a chemical engine from Joliet and the only engine which Lemont could send to the scene of the conflagration, saved the town from being in ashes.

One-half the business buildings of the town were consumed. The city hall and records, the post office and contents, the public school building, the opera house and the telephone exchange were among the victims of the flames. The fire started at 10:30 o'clock in the Phœnix newspaper and printing building, owned by Mayor Lem McDonald, who is the editor of the paper.

An excellent suggestion was that contained in the remark of a little ten-year-old girl from the country, who had been visiting a summer friend in her city home. "Did you have a good time?" asked the child's mother when the girl came back from her week's visit. "Beautiful!" replied the little traveler, with great enthusiasm; "why, they were so polite they made me feel just as if I was the one that was at home, and they were visitin'. ## ONLY A THOUGHT.

"It may comfort your heart as it comforted mine;
As it answered my prayers, it may answer thine."

The God who taketh care of us can guard our loved ones, too,
When we are called to go from them and pass death's valley through:
The "everlasting arms shall beneath them ever be:"
His love can cherish far beyond the love of you or me.

So let us leave "the times" with Him, nor murmur when He calls,
But trust the Hand, from out whose grasp the restful mantle falls
Perchance life's best fulfillment comes when life's brief span is o'er,
Perchance a mother's voice of love, when heard on earth no more,
May echo with a sweeter tone and have a deeper power,
Though only with an angel's breath, it comes at midnight's hour.

We leave it, Father, all with Thee; do Thy way; that is best;
But grant that seeds our hands now sow may grow when they're at rest.

—Alice Danner Jones, in Womankind.

GRATEFUL BEAR CUBS.

Tale of a Potato Field by a Man from Sinnemahoning Way.

His Uncle's Power of Remembering, His Father's Business Idea, and His Own Willingness to Take Homer's Place.

"Honestly," said the man from Sinnemahoning way, "I feel sorry for this side of the mountain every time I come over from old Sinnemahone! I do, really! Honest, I do! Why? Because, in the first place, this side of the mountain seems to feel its littleness, and its away-down-in-the-depthsness, as it were, and I can see it wondering what it's on earth for, knowing that Sinnemahone is just over beyond, kicking its heels in the air, so to speak, like a lamb on the hillside and swelling up, and looking sassy, as if it might be a steer in the oats! And, in the second place, because I have noticed a preponderance of yaller dog on this side of the mountain, and then this side of the mountain's bears ain't up to snuff. 'Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey, where yaller dogs accumulate and bears ain't gay!' Sorry? Why, I'm so sorry for this side of the mountain that if I had a besom of destruction with me I'd sweep every one of your yaller dogs into the Allegheny river yander, and then go and drive a herd of Sinnemahoning bears over here and give you a new start in life! Sinnemahoning bears! Why, say, Homer made the mistake of his life in not waiting a few thousand years and being born on the old Sinnemahone! Then he'd have had something to twang his lyre about! He wouldn't have had to tramp barefoot over the hills of Greece and adjacent bailiwicks, making heroes and heroines out of more or less disreputable folks, but he could have stamped and sloshed along the storied Sinnemahoning, in a pair of cowhide boots, and sung of bear till the cows come home! I often lie awake nights regretting that Homer made that mistake. Those Sinnemahoning bears ought to have a Homer to put 'em on record as they should be put. But all is not lost. Homer gave old Sinnemahoning the go-by, and preferred ancient Greece to bear's grease, but all is not lost. Old Sinnemahone may not have a Homer, but she has Me! And if her bears don't go down to posterity with bells on my name ain't Praxiteles Pettibone!

"The trouble with me is, my memory isn't long enough to do the Sinnemahone bear full justice. I have to deal with him as a contemporary, and contemporaneous history is a trifle dangerous to handle, for there are other people who are contemporaneous, and they may insist on proofs. It is much nicer to deal with history that was contemporaneous with your grandfather, for then the burden of proof is on him, and all you have to do is to cite authorities. Now, if I had a memory like an uncle of mine once had, I could go way back beyond this question with ease, and show up the Sinnemahone bear in a shape that would be much more amusing than any he has put on within my recollection, amazing as that shape has frequently been. That uncle of mine quit working his memory, though, quite suddenly, and the reaction hastened his death. He was letting it have full sway once, and after he had at last called it in, the new school-teacher, who had never heard my uncle remember before, said to him:

"'If I had your memory and fearlessness in exercising it, I would write a book and call it "Recollections of the Deluge, by a Survivor."'

"Somehow after that my uncle quit remembering and went into a decline, and never stopped this side of Jordan.

"When I was a boy, ten years or so old, my father, Reuben Pettibone, said to me one day:

"'Praxiteles,' said he, 'I s'pose you know them 'taters is to be planted to-day. I guess we'd better get at 'em.'

"I knew it well enough, but I had just dug a lot of worms and had everything ready to go down to the creek and try for trout. So I said:

"'Yes, father. But the trout are biting tremendous, so they say.'

"'Is that so?' said father. 'Well, my son, I s'pose, then, you've been digging fishworms?'

"'Yes, father,' said I, feeling good, for father was an indulgent parent.

"'And got your pole and line all fixed ready, too, I s'pose?' said he.

"'Yes, father,' I said, and felt just as if I was as good as on the creek.

"'Well,' said he, 'I s'pose it wouldn't make much difference if only one of us planted 'taters to-day?'

"'Not a bit,' said I, 'if it don't make any difference to you.'

"'No, it don't,' says he. 'You're sure you got fishworms enough?

"'Plenty,' I said, starting to get my pole.

"'And you're sure the trout are biting good?' said he.

"'They were never biting better,' said I.

"'All right,' said he. 'I guess I'll take the pole, then, and go down to the creek and see what luck I'll have. You go on planting 'taters as if I wasn't here, and get in as many as you can, for it's a good day for planting. If you get that field all in to-day you can go fishing yourself all next week.'

"I was a trifle set back, but I couldn't help admire the preponderance of the business idea in my father. It wasn't fishing that he cared so much about. It was the getting in of the 'taters, and you'll notice that he didn't make up his mind to go a fishing until he found I could get along with the planting all right. My father was a remarkable man in a good many respects, and it is with feelings of great thankfulness that I look back now and know that he let business overpower indulgence that day.

"Along back in March that year I was out trying the maple trees, with an eye to see how sap was running, when out of the brush, off to one side of me, an old she bear came rushing. She hugged a cub to her breast in each arm, and terror actually rolled out of her eyes. She saw me and came almost to my feet, where she crouched down and turned her eyes up at me with an appealing look that almost made me sob. I soon knew what was the matter with her, for out of the brush sprang a tremendous big panther. He stopped when he saw me, and glared at me and the bear family. The old bear trembled and moaned, and the baby bears cried painfully human-like. I grasped the situation at once. There was nothing in the woods that panthers doted on as they did on fat, juicy spring bear cubs, and they never hesitated to snatch 'em right out of their mother's arms, if they couldn't get 'em any other way. This panther had got on the train of this particular bear mother and her little ones, and had made up his mind to have a meal or two on the cubs. She had fled from him, and seeing me, had thrown herself and family on my mercy, and was there appealing to me to save her children, just as plain as plain could be.

"I don't suppose it is necessary for me to tell you that she brought her cubs to the right market for safety. I stepped between that glaring panther and that trembling, wailing family of bears. I had my ax with me. The bears crouched at my heels and moaned and whined. The panther lashed his tail and glared. He knew what I was there for, and made up his mind to show me how little he thought I knew about it. He lifted up his voice and yelled. Then he lifted up himself and leaped straight at me. I swung my ax. The ax and the panther met in midair. The panther's blood flew around and mussed me up considerably, but I couldn't help but feel pleased over the way that ax had slid through him, from his nose clear to the very tip of his tail. One-half of the panther fell on one side of me and the other half on the opposite side. A butcher with his knife and cleaver couldn't have carved him in two any prettier. I was pleased. I was, indeed. And the old bear tried to lick my hands and feet, she was so grateful; but I stood her away, and she took herself off with her young ones, her eyes beaming with gratitude as far as I could see her.

"'That's all right,' I said to myself. 'I've saved them cubs, now, but they'll grow up. I'll have some fun with 'em one o' these days.'

"So I went home and thought no more about it.

"The field we were planting to 'taters had three acres in it.

"'If I get it all planted to-day I can go fishing myself, all next week, can I?' I said to myself after father had gone. 'It'll take two men two days to plant this field, so I guess I won't go fishing next week.'

"Wonderful head for business my father had! Wonderful! I went to dropping and covering 'taters and had planted about half of one row, when a bear about as big as a shepherd dog appeared suddenly before me. It scooped out a hole in the ground with its paws, then went on three feet and scooped out another one, straight ahead, and right in the 'tater row. While I was wondering yet what the sassy young cub was trying to get through him, I felt myself pushed from behind. The push sent me pretty near stumbling to the ground and past the first hole the cub had dug. I had some seed 'taters in my hand and some of it dropped out and fell in the hole. I looked behind me to see who was pushing me, and there I saw another bear, the same size of the first one. This one had come forward and was covering dirt over the 'tater seed I had dropped in the hole. I looked ahead at the other bear, and he was working away, digging holes, regular and straight along that row. Well, I wasn't quite a fool, and so I said:

"'Ho, ho! I see! These are the two cubs I saved from the panther when they were babes in arms, so to speak. And they have come to give me a lift in my 'tater planting, to show their gratitude.'

"And I went to dropping 'taters in the hole the one bear dug, and the other bear came along after me and covered 'em as slick and proper as I would have done it with a hoe! There wasn't a word said. I followed the hole-digging bear right on his heels and dropped 'taters, and the other bear followed close on my heels and covered 'em, and the combination worked so amazing well that by three o'clock in the afternoon that whole field was planted, and planted better than it had ever been planted before! When the last hole was dug and the last 'tater dropped and covered, the two bears trotted back to the woods, and I don't know that I ever saw them again. I hadn't been home long when father came in from fishing. His luck had been poor and he felt a little testy.

"'Never mind, father,' said I. 'I'm going fishing for a week, and I'll fetch in some.'

"'Fishing for a week!' said father.

"'Yes,' said I. 'I finished planting the three-acre 'tater field to-day.'

"Father looked so scared that I told him the whole story. After he heard it he said:

"'Praxiteles, they may tie the old Sinnemahone one of these days, but they'll never beat her!'

"And so I say, honestly, that I feel sorry for this side of the mountain every time I come over from Sinnemahoning way! I do, really! I do, indeed!"

"Sinnemahone!" said the man in the red, blue, green, pink, purple and yellow Mackinaw jacket, "if you felt half as sorry as this side o' the mountain does you'd go and shed tears with more salt in 'em than there is in a bar'l o' brine!"—Ed Mott, in N. Y. Sun.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Pearls.

The Minnesota river has so far only benefitted the people of the state by its beautiful sceneries and its bottom lands for the raising of potatoes. But circumstances indicate that it may in the future come to play quite an important part in the wealth-producing labors of our citizens. There are people to be found who assert that small fortunes are hidden on the bottom of the river in question.

John Mattson, of Minneapolis, is an expert pearl fisher, having gathered a vast amount of experience from fishing in the clear rivers of Sweden, as well as in the rivers of Wisconsin, Missouri, Illinois and Indiana. Some time ago he got a notion to try the Minnesota river. About a mile and a half above Fort Snelling he has leased some bottom land. At that spot he commenced looking for clams. The result was several small pearls and one big pearl, which he has later sold to Bunde & Upmeyer, of Milwaukee, for $20. That pearl would have been worth $50 had there not been a small spot on it. Mr. Mattson has since the time of that first attempt traveled along the river as far as Belle Plain.

The result of his investigation is that the river abounds with pearl-yielding clams or "pearl mussels." They are generally found at a depth of from six to eight feet, which is rather uncommon, as the pearl mussels are usually found in shallow water. It is therefore somewhat difficult to get at the mussels of the Minnesota river; and the number of clams containing pearls is comparatively small. But the fact that the pearls found are of rare beauty and generally of good size, may be taken as a compensation.

Wheat Grades.

The State grain and warehouse commission have established the following grades:

No. 1 Hard Spring Wheat—No. 1 hard spring wheat must be sound, bright and well cleaned, and must be composed mostly of hard Scotch Fife, and weigh not less than fifty-eight pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 1 Northern Spring Wheat—No. 1 Northern spring wheat must be sound and well cleaned, and must be composed of the hard and soft varieties of spring wheat. Note—It is to be understood that the minimum test weight of this grade shall be not less than fifty-seven pounds to the measured bushel, and must contain not less than about 50 per cent of the hard varieties of spring wheat.

No. 2 Northern Spring Wheat—No. 2 Northern spring wheat must be sound, reasonably clear and of good milling quality. Note—This grade to include all wheat not suitable for the higher grades, and to weigh not less than fifty-six pounds to the measured bushel.

No. 3 Spring Weat—No. 3 spring wheat shall comprise all inferior, shrunken or dirty spring wheat, weighing not less than fifty-four pounds to the measured bushel.

Rejected Spring Wheat—Rejected spring wheat shall include all spring wheat that is grown, badly bleached, or for any cause unfit for No. 2 wheat. Note—Wheat containing admixture of "rice" or "goose" wheat will in no case be graded higher than rejected.

Fooled the Police.

The report was abroad recently that an unknown man had committed suicide at Merriam Park. The Prior avenue police station had been notified and the coroner sent for. Before he arrived the body was cut down. It did not fall with the proverbial dull, sickening thud and as the morbidly curious crowd pressed forward they beheld the familiar features of the dummy that had once been attached to the hand organ of the merry-go-round, now stationed at the corner of Prior and University avenues. The children did it.

News in Brief.

The miscellaneous receipts of the state prison for July aggregated $14,510, of which amount $3,294 was for convict labor, $,684 for support of United States prisoners and $8,311 for sales and collections of binder twins.

Fire destroyed the large hay shed of John C. Hiebert at Mountain Lake together with its contents, a hay press, engine, several tons of hay and other small machinery. The origin of the fire is not known, but it is supposed that tramps were sleeping in ths hay.

During the past week a number of merchants in St. Cloud have been caught by a counterfeiter, who has been industriously at work changing $1 silver certificates into $5 bills. Old, worn out bills were used and they were passed in each instance without detection.

The Minneapolis police have been requested by the authorities at Helena, Mont., to help in apprehending and locating two tramps, who, on Aug. 2, shot and wounded Brakeman Taylor, of the Minneapolis & St. Louis road, at that place. It is supposed that they come to this city.

A bolt of lightning out of an apparently clear sky struck the livery barn of James Simpson, at Ellsworth, setting it on fire in a flash. The barn was located on the east side of town and a heavy wind was blowing from the east, and but for the prompt work of the fire department the north half of the business section of the town would have burned.

The flour production at Duluth mills last week was 74,400 barrels; receipts by rail from interior mills, 76,915 barrels; total shipments, 103,705 barrels; exports, 14,070 barrels; rail, 45,950 barrels; stock in mill houses, 96,605 barrels; in transit, 201,685 barrels; total, 298,290 barrels.

Warrants were sworn out in St. Paul for two of the most successful confidence men who ever operated in the West. One was for Tom Jackson, alias Tom Ryan; and the other was for Joe Nichols, commonly known among the light-fingered gentry as Broken Nose Mage. Both are wanted for obtaining money under false pretenses.

J. K. Harris was arrested at Winona on a telegram from Red Wing, stating that he had obtained money by false pretenses. He claimed to be a Mason and borrowed $15 from the society at Red Wing, as well as some at Lake City. He will have a trial at Red Wing.

The body of an infant a few months old was found by some boys while fishing in the river at Winona. It is probably a case of child murder.

A report on the Iron River strike showed that, although the strike was over, the companies were trying to break up the union by running only one shift.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Strawberry Sirup: Take fresh strawberries and inclose in a coarse bag. Press out the juice and to each quart add one pint of water and six pounds white sugar. Dissolve by raising to the boiling point and strain. Bottle and cork while hot, then keep in a cool place.—Western Rural.

—Fish Salad: It is generally imagined that salmon is the only fish, except shell fish, that is good in salad. This is a great mistake, for nearly all kinds of cold fish can be used in this way, and cold turbot or cod is especially good. Take the fish, free from all skin and bone, and cut it into square pieces; arrange a salid prettily in a dish with the fish on the top, and over it pour a rich mayonnaise, or salad dressing. Garnish with slices of tomatoes, hard-boiled egg, and small pieces of pickled gherkins. A salid of this kind is very good, especially in the summer.—Leed's Mercury.

—Boiled Salad Dressing: Take the same quantity of mustard, sugar and salt as for mayonnaise. Melt a tablespoonful of butter and add to these ingredients; add two eggs well beaten, half a cup, or four ounces, of vinegar and half a pint of milk. Pour all into a graniteware double boiler, or a large bowl set in a pot of boiling water, and stir until it thickens like boiled custard. Remove as soon as it grows thick or it will curdle. If put in a wide-mouthed bottle or self-sealing jar, and kept covered, this dressing will keep for a fortnight or more.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Potato Croquettes: Potato croquettes make a pretty dish to serve with cold meats of any sort. They are made from finely-mashed potatoes whipped with the yolks of eggs until very light, then seasoned with pepper, salt, a little onion juice, some finely-chopped parsley, and further moistened with a little cream. When thoroughly mixed, heat in a double boiler, and when cool enough to handle form into croquettes, dip in egg yolk and cracker crumbs, and drop into boiling lard. When brown, remove with a skimmer, place for a moment on a sheet of brown paper, and then remove in a hot platter; garnish with parsley and serve.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

—Mock Duck: Three good-sized veal cutlets trimmed into neat shape. Have ready a stuffing made of large cupful of bread crumbs and two tablespoonfuls of chopped pork, one small onion chopped fine, a tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper. Roll and tie up the cutlets, after having spread them with the stuffing. Put them into a baking pan with cold water to cover them; bake about three-quarters of an hour, covered closely. When nearly done take half a cup of gravy, half a cup of water, a tablespoonful of butter and let them come to a boil. Put the steaks on a hot dish, removing the thread carefully so as not to injure the shape of the roll. Pour on the gravy and cover them, adding a teaspoonful of catchup, a squeeze of lemon, a little salt and pepper, the last thing before taking up.—Chicago Record.

YOU SHOULDN'T DO IT.

Some Don'ts Laid Down by Those Who Set the Fashion.

You shouldn't carry a flower, lace or chiffon-trimmed parasol in town except for carriage use.

You shouldn't allow your dressmaker to stiffen your summer gowns except with the very lightest and most pliable material.

You shouldn't wear high stock collars with bows, which make you look as if your head was tied on—they are passee.

You shouldn't have your gown measure more than seven yards around the hem; five and a half if you are small, four and a half if you are sensible and small.

The girls can tell their brothers and beaux that they shouldn't wear cuff-buttons if they wish to be "English, you know." The latest fad is to fasten the cuffs with a bow of narrow black satin ribbon, leaving the ends about four inches long.

You shouldn't wear a cloth cap in the summer either for cycling, golf or tennis. It collects the dust and is very warm; straw or duck is more up-to-date and comfortable. You shouldn't ignore fashion altogether.

You needn't be in the fashion if you do not want to and happen to be an exceptionally pretty woman.

You shouldn't be extreme.

You shouldn't wear tan shoes with a silk or any dressy gown.

You shouldn't sacrifice your individuality at the shrine of fashion.

You shouldn't wear a silk or satin bodice with a linen coat and skirt.

You shouldn't wear a floral collar if your complexion is faded or inclined to yellowness.

Redfern says you shouldn't wear bloomers without a skirt, unless you wish to look vulgar.

You shouldn't wear silk or velvet for travelling; washable materials or brillantine are the best.—Philadelphia Times.

Fashion Notes.

A handsome dress of soft satin has the wide, flaring skirt made with many gores. Each seam has a band of fancy galloon or passementerie extending the full length from braid to belt. The waist has an Eton jacket-shaped upper portion, made of passementerie. This curves away from the collar to a point just below the arm-holes. From this soft crape is puffed, forming a full front, which is in turn held in place by a passementerie corselet. The sleeves are of satin and crape, with points of passementerie set in at the shoulders and falling over the sleeve-tops. Skirts are showing more trimming with every new importation. One skirt has two fluted ruffles arranged in deep scallops, the points of the scallops finished with rosette bows. Another skirt has a ten-inch, flat, side-plaited ruffle. Another a four-inch band of Grecian embroidery at the hem. Another has wide bands of galloon just above the hem. And yet another a four-inch finish of embroidery just above the braid.—N. Y. Ledger.

Household Economy.

A woman noted for the good food provided for her family at a comparatively small cost says: "I found the outlay for meats the largest weekly item, and so I paid special attention to all those dishes made from meats that do not require the most expensive cuts. I buy oysters by the bushel, and open them myself; they will keep a long time in cool weather if you learn how to lay them on the cellar-bottom. I can my own fruits and such vegetables as corn and tomatoes."—N. Y. Post.

CAN'T REMEMBER SUNDAYS.

Why "Old Leather Breeches" Threatened to Keep an Almanac at Home.

"Old Leather Breeches" was at one time the best known guide and trapper in Pike county, Pennsylvania. He lived in the woods not many miles from Milford, the county seat. His proper name no one knew, but on account of the leather trousers which he invariably wore he was known by every one as 'Old Leather Breeches."

Only occasional visits were made by the old man to town, and then he came for tobacco and whisky. One Sunday morning he walked into town, and upon arriving at his favorite trading place was surprised to see it closed.

"Hello," said he, "somebody dead, I guess."

Proceeding leisurely down the main street he went to another store, only to find this closed also. Completely nonplussed the trapper hailed the first passerby with, "Say, who is dead? Must be some big gun, I guess. Where is the funeral?"

"Why, this is Sunday, old man," replied the villager.

"Sunday! Sunday!" ejaculated "Old Leather Breeches," in surprise. "Well, I guess I'll have to keep an almanac to home after this. Had all my trouble for nothing."—N. Y. Herald.

A SLAVE FROM BOYHOOD.

(From the Red Wing, Minn., Republican.)

"I am now twenty-four years old," said Edwin Swanson, of White Rock, Goodhue county, Minn., to a Republican representative, "and as you can see I am not very large of stature. When I was eleven years old I became afflicted with a sickness which baffled the skill and knowledge of the physician. I was not taken suddenly ill, but on the contrary I can hardly state the exact time when it began. The first symptoms were pains in my back and restless nights. The disease did not trouble me much at first, but it seemed to have settled in my body to stay, and my bitter experience during the last thirteen years proved that to be the case. I was of course a child, and never dreamed of the suffering in store for me. I complained to my parents and they concluded that in time I would outgrow my trouble, but when they heard me groaning during my sleep they became thoroughly alarmed. Medical advice was sought but to no avail, I grew rapidly worse and was soon unable to move about and finally became confined continually to my bed. The best doctors that could be had were consulted, but did nothing for me. I tried various kinds of extensively advertised patent medicines with but the same result.

"For twelve long years I was thus a sufferer, in constant agony without respite, abscesses formed on my body in rapid succession and the world indeed looked very dark to me. About this time when all hope was gone and nothing seemed left but to resign myself to my most bitter fate my attention was called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Like a drowning man grasping at a straw, in sheer desperation I concluded to make one more attempt—not to regain my health (I dare not to hope so much) but if possible to ease my pain.

"I bought a box of the pills and they seemed to do me good. I felt encouraged and continued their use. After taking six boxes I was up and able to walk around the house. I have not felt so well for thirteen years as during the past year. Only one year have I taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I am able now to do chores and attend to light duties.

"Do I hesitate to let you publish what I have said? No. Why should I? It is the truth and I am only too glad to let other sufferers know my experience. It may help those whose cup of misery is as full to-day as mine was in the past."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

THE GENESIS OF THEM.

The Peculiar Origin of Some Great and Learned Books.

CHAPTER I.

Sunlight streamed over the harbors of New York bay.

A noble ship was slowly plowing her way through the heaving waters to her pier.

As she neared the dock the large crowd which had assembled could see the form of a man upon the prow eagerly peering toward the land.

The boat came to anchor and the crowd passed toward the gangways. The man had disappeared.

CHAPTER II.

Joyful were the greetings which the gladsome voyagers and their equally gladsome friends were exchanging when suddenly the Man appeared from the cabin.

He was a dark and distinguished looking foreigner.

"What place is this that it is?" he asked in idiomatic French.

"It's Noo York," replied the captain.

CHAPTER III.

The distinguished foreigner was seized with sudden excitement.

"New York!" he exclaimed to his valet de chambre, "New York! Parblieu! Pierre, make yourself quick to take the baggage to the shore."

The faithful Pierre obeyed and master and man disappeared down the ladder and were swallowed up in the eddying throng.

CHAPTER IV.

"Pierre!"

It was an exclamation from the distinguished foreigner and the faithful valet turned obedient as ever.

"Pierre, go to the next wharf quick and find if that steamer there is about to sail."

"Yes, M'sieur," replied Pierre, "it departs in five minutes."

"Take the baggage there at once!" cried the foreigner as he and the valet dashed hastily across the docks and up into the steamer about to sail for Europe. They had barely time. The steamer moved the moment they were aboard.

CHAPTER V.

"Ah, ha!" said the distinguished foreigner, as he leaned over the railing and regarded the rapidly vanishing shores. "It makes itself good. Now I will go to my loved Paris and write my great work on 'Impressions of American Life.'"—Chicago Record.

Inexpensive Draperies.

Some beautiful inexpensive materials for draperies and hangings in country houses and seaside cottages have a shadowy pattern of iris, morning-glory, dragon-fly, crabs, or seaweeds scattered over the surface. These are known as shadow cottons. A fabric with the weight and heavy soft appearance of chamois-skin is known as chamois cloth. It is a silk and cotton mixture with flower patterns on different-colored grounds. One of these seen is of the natural chamois color with masses of feathery chrysanthemums growing on it. A blue ground in the same stuff has an iris pattern. Imported yachting cloths in all colors are used as hangings and cushions for yachts as well as for cushions for piazza use.—N. Y. Post.

A Fastidious Miss.

A short time ago a young woman of fashion in Washington went to one of the taxidermists of the Smithsonian institution and wanted a favor. She had with her a bright canary bird, alive and chirruping, and she very much desired the taxidermist to kill and stuff the bird for her. She went on to say that she had "hunted all over the city for a bird of just this shade," because she wanted the plumage to match in color a new gown which she was having made. The bird that she brought she wanted stuffed for an ornament for her person.

to the women who wash with Pearline, when they see a woman washing in the old-fashioned way with soap—rubbing the clothes to pieces, rubbing away her strength, wearing herself out over the washboard! To these Pearline women, fresh from easy washing, she seems to "wear a fool's cap unawares." Everything's in favor of Pearline—easier work, quicker work, better work, safety, economy. There's not one thing against it. What's the use of washing in the hardest way, when it costs more money? 489

—Joe Masanz crop turned out fine threshing 36 bushels to the acre, on six acres of wheat.

—Quite a number of Delanoites went to Rockford last Sunday to attend campmeeting.

—Jim Hill's crew put in a temporary water tank this week while the old one is being repaired.

—Fair Day, last Saturday was only tolerably well attended; farmers are too busy with their big harvests to find time to spend in town.

—Delao's council seems to have fallen into the rut the Eagle accuses them of being in last year; three men transacting the business when it comes to a vote.

—Herb Hall, from Montana, took a ride on Harry Young's new bronco, a few days ago, to Greenwood, with a genuine cowboy outfit: since then Harry can ride him anywhere.

—Wheat continues to come to market quite freely, notwithstanding the circulars to "hold your wheat" people who have been living on "tick" long enough are selling enough to pay up, and live without mortgaging what they have.

—The Presbyterian church committee met Tuesday and resolved to build according to a plan furnished by Mr. E. Babb; work to commence next Monday morning, under the supervision of N. K. Coffin. No conctract was let, but those wishing, may contribute work, which will be gladly received and due credit given.

—While in the Capital City Tuesday we learned that the GAZETTE is read even where it comes among the great dailies of St. Paul. One of our readers said: "I see by the GAZETTE that you have weeds in Delano." Another, a politician showed us a clipping from the GAZETTE that happened to strike him about right that he was carrying around in his pocket book.

—On Tuesday A. F. Corey stopped his team in the road, and ran down to his sorghum mill, a couple of rods away. The team didn't think it was time to grind cane and got in a hurry to make hay, and went at once, at a lively gait, to the meadow; Mr. Corey came in due time. The lines got wrapped in the wheel and stopped the team after they had run about a mile.

—Our neighbors from Independence when they are in town have some exciting yarns to tell about book agents who are around trying to deliver a History of Minneapolis and Hennepin County, for which they claim the farmers subscribed four years ago. The farmers, including John McGary, Earl and George Hoisington, Henry Fogleman, George Washington and others indignantly deny having ordered the books and refuse to accept or pay for them. It is reported that several women have been frightened and one induced to pay $18. for the two volumes; and that a man has been sued and is to appear Monday with F. H. Lindsley as his attorney, backed by the afflicted community, before a Justice of the Peace, at Minneapolis. Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, is reported as being one of the intended victims. If things are as reported, by more than one of the citizens of Independence a terrible outrage on the community has been attempted and should be suppressed. Those interested threaten to not only see their companion in distress free from even a taint of suspicion, but to bring the book men before the Court to answer for their actions. If men are to come around and do as these history vendors are accused of having done people are no longer safe even at home on their own farms.

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—The M. E. ladies sociable at the church yard last night was a great success.

—The Eagle seems to have a hard time swarming, but it looks as if she will finally succeed.

—A meeting is called for Monday evening, Aug. 19, to talk up the Asylum business, at the City Hall, at 7:30 P. M.

—If you wish a fine boquet ask W. D. Freeman to bring you one. He has as fine a flower garden as the country affords.

—Photographs at Delano 4th, 5th and 6th of every month. Don't forge date. Satisfaction guaranteed.

46tf. C. W. CURRIER.

—This year when hay is scarce if farmers would stack their corn and other products in a suitable manner they could piece out the winter much to the satisfaction of their stock and themselves with fine feed

—A. Meister took possession of Young's Hotel Saturday, and is now thoroughly installed as "Mine Host." J. D. Young has established himself, on his farm residence, where he says he has abundance of good "grub" and some to spare.

—The road grader has been put into the engine house: the swine have been excluded from the limits; some of the village weeds have been mowed; the dangerous hole into which ex-Superintendent Lindsley fell, has been partially covered over, and the GAZETTE feels a little better on these subjects.

—Fred Adickes. Sr. says his wheat threshed out about 27 or 28 bushels to the acre; and he considers that good enough; and don't beleive in bragging. He also says, that farmers are foolish to sell potatoes at 15cts. per bushel; it would pay them better to feed them to something, even to cook them for chickens.

—Unfortunately the committee on securing the Fourth Asylum for Insane at this place is not a very harmonious one; and if the institution is secured it will have to be through the efforts of those willing to work for the interests of the village. Get together gentlemen and put the best foot forward for the success of our village in securing something that will bring lots of work for years, to those needing it.

—The meeting held at the City Hall, Tuesday evening, to ascertain the feeling of the citizens concerning the purchase of a park, was attended by J. M. Borrell, C. A. Brunkow, C. J. Buckley, T. J. Catlin, Geo. Goodrich, F. H. Lindsley, M. A. O'Hair and F. L. Scherer. Meeting was called to order and F. L. Scherer was elected Chairman and T. J. Catlin, Secretary. After some discussion on the question a motion to adjourn was made and carried. The fact was developed that not a member of the council took interest enough in whether the village has a park or not; or whether it goes in debt head over heels or not, to come to the meeting and do their duty as American citizens, in the matter.

—A few of our farmers have been talking about selling out for some time and going to some warmer climate, but owing to hard times they could find no opportunity. The committee on locating the new Asylume for Insane is now hunting for 640 acres, and if our farmers who want to get away so bad, will just put their land in at prices the state can pay perhaps they can sell. If a man who lives in the tract the state wants don't wish to leave here he may find another farm near by the owner of which desires to sell, and which he would like better than the one he has, and which he could buy for less than he gets for his, thus accommodating all parties. The State has appropriated $15,000, with which to buy a site, this would be something over $23, per acre. not a very large price, to be sure, but in these hard times, if a man is anxious to sell, he will probably be much more anxious before he finds anyone with ready cash to pay for all his land at once. If people really want to sell they will probably wish they had a chance before they get a better chance, for so much landlall together.

—The retiring Treasurer of the Delano Board of Education has in his organ, this week, some of his "spitefully cranky" remarks concerning the GAZETTE and Dr. Catlin; among other things he quotes Prof. Aiton's report as being in favor of one stairway, properly arranged in a school house rather than two poor ones, as if that cut any figure as to the necessity of some Fire Escapes on our six roomed school house; he doesn't say that Prof. Aiton or any other bright man is in favor of shutting up two or three hundred children in a six roomed house, with a roaring furnace in the basement, and but one out side door to the house and no Fire Escapes, on account of the bullheadedness of some men on the school board. If the school house should burn and some life be lost the Eagle might learn that it is a dangerous place, or it might do as it did with the president of the board when he fell into a dangerous hole on the street say he should have kept out.

As for the part of the article appertaining to "financeers" and "ignorance" and "demagogism" we do not dispute the ex-Treasurer's right to his place in the minds of all honest and intelligent citizens of school district No. 34, which he has earned by managing the sinking fund of the district with a $12,800. debt for a dozen years, annually promising to reduce it, and which he now clinches, by handing over so ungracefully, the debt in its entirety, to his successor in office, and who it is hoped will apply the sinking fund on the school debt.

County Cullings.

Hon. H. C. Bull, of Cokato, was an eastward bound passenger on the G. N. this morning. He says crops are splendid in his neighborhood.

Levi Thompson, of North Rockford, is said to have two acres of fine onions, and expects to harvest 500 bushels. That must be a paying crop.

James Stoddart, one of Rockford's prosperous farmers, says: "My wheat went 28 bushels to the acre, this I consider excellent, I don't take much stock in most of the reported larger yields." This seems to be the verdict in this part of the country.

A. F. Mrocok, who is threshing in Franklin town tells us that the average crop of wheat is from 15 to 20 bushels; and that their machine has not yet found any of the 30 bushels to an acre fields. He think most of that kind more wind than anything else.

Prof. Bohn says in looking over valuations of property recently made in our county he finds that the temperance villages of Howard Lake, Cokato and Monticello outrank Delano in wealth, and wants to know how that comes if saloons are necessary to the existance of the town.

The Buffalo Journal says: "This time next year we will be in one of the hottest campaigns ever waged in this country. Locally, there is likely to be quite a scrap and there wont be any "dead cinches" to speak of. It is said that all things come to him who waits" And A. Y. is getting to be quite a waiter himself.

We presume the Wright County agricultural society intend holding a fair at Howard Lake this fall. If so, they should take steps soon to let people know of it, that they may save up the biggest pumpkins and other things to help make it attractive. Most of the people are tired of attending horse races and gambling tables; to the exclusion of other things and would be glad to see a good display of the products of the fields and industries of the county for a change. Fairs can no more than other business, flourish without liberal advertising.

There promises to be either one of the tamest, cut anp dried Republican legislative conventions, or one of the liveliest, free for all fights ever held in the district in about a year from now. Why, the members of the G. O. P. are so sure, now, of winning, in case of a nomination that they are climbing all over each other for the honor. It is not at all likely that the magnimimity of giving Sherburne two men on the ticket. will be repeated, now that the chairmen of the Wright county committee can write Senator before his name, and of course neither of the present incumbants from our neighboring county will care to step down, and out simply to accomodate the other: taint hardly human nature. In Wright county, of course, there would be an opening for another of the select coterie, but who? How can the muss of last fall be bridged over? What can be done to reconcile those whose corns were trampled on last time, and times before? Wait and see, It is best to be fair.

Another lumber company has pai the state $4,000 for trespass(?). The Waverly kids played the Delano kids last Tuesday on the latter's grounds. This is the second time these baseball aggregations have come together and each time it has proven disastrous for Waverly. H. H. Homes, who is believed to be a multi-murderer has announced that his belief regarding religion is in harmony with the ideas of Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll. ### MY MOTHER.

I am thinking of the hours
Spent in years of long ago,
Sitting by the homestead fire
Listening, as the embers glow.

Listening to the words of, "Foxie
Don't you be a thief,
Ah you need no roasted chicken
Take a mouse and leave."

She could sing as could no other,
Songs for infant hearts like mine
And could tuck me up the snuggest
In my trundle bed at nine.

But I see her hands stop knitting
And her face grow cold in death,
I shall never see her sitting
In the old accustomed place.

But to meet her in that Kingdom
Far beyond the pale of strife,
Shall engage my every moment
Thus to gain a crown of life.

Be not weary—be courageous,
Do not hear the scorn of man,
Stand up boldly in the conflict
The Lord will guide us safely home.

Sorrow, O, depart forever
Stay no longer near my door,
Go thy way, thou soul destroyer
I will never see you more.

You have brought my hairs to whiteness
And my life to wretchedness,
So I cannot will not see you
You are all unrighteousness.

Peace, content and love is wanted,
Peace that sorrow cannot give
Peace that passeth understanding
Peace that says, "look up and live."

Then in the evening of our life time
We should have a quiet hour,
With our loved ones all about us
In some pleasant shady bower.

There to spend the lingering moments
And prepare for brighter days,
Making up the hours wasted
Wasted in so many ways.

There to wait the Masters, come up
Into life that has no end
Where the angels and the cherub
With parents, brother, sisters, friends.

—A. F. WILSON.

JAMES E. CAMPBELL, Ohio's ex Governor will again lead the Democrats to victory in the Buckeye state.

DEMOCRATS in Nebraska are for free silver. In Ohio they'r not.. Republicans will, of course, have to take the other side.

THE St. Cloud branch of the A. R U. seem to be in trouble. Some of the leading officers were to assist in regulating matters this week.

CUSHMAN K. DAVIS is now a fully fledged candidate for nomination for President of the United States. Minnesota is a good State to get a President from.

THE three months for which the A. R. U officials were imprisoned having passed by they were set at liberty one day this week. Debbs has three months yet to serve.

A. R. MCGILL is mentioned as a successor to U. S. Senator C. K. Davis' shoes, when he doffs them to don those of Grover. It is hardly likely that either of the gentlemen will be troubled with corns from tightness of their foot gear, should they be successful in their efforts.

MISS JULIA A. GING, administratrix of her sister Catherine Ging's estate, has retained Attorney William H. Eustice and commenced suit against Harry T. Hayward to recover the notes of her sister given to Hayward in the amount of $9,500, and for which it is claimed he advanced not a dollar. The case is to come up in September.

A REPORT has been given out, and widely circulated, that there will be a "Bull Fight" at the Atlanta Exposition. This must have been done by those wishing to injure the exposition as it is not likely civilized people, living in a leading christian country in this enlightened age would patreonize such a thing. In any event our guardian Angell dont propose to allow a bull fight to come off at that time and place.

IN discussing the money question our Republican friends have begun to make use of what they call argument by saying it matters not of what material a measure is made so there is an established standard. They say it is not necessary for every bushel of corn to be measured in the standard basket. This, of course is true, to a certain extent. But every man wants a measure that corresponds with the standard, to do his measuring with; or he wants scales where he can see that he receives full credit for what he sells. There must be enough measures, enough scales, so that everybody can use them, to satisfy the people who buy and sell. So with money to satisfy the people there must be money enough so each can handle it; have some of his own on hand all the time.

FROM reading the Republican newspapers of the Sixth District of two years ago and now, one would think the Republicans hard to please with a Congressman. Two years ago they were howling about the Democratic Congressman, Baldwin; now it is their selection, Young Mr. Towne, who is receiving all their rantings and railings. They are bound not to be satisfied; not even with the Congressman of their own choosing. Hoop 'er up boys! Hoop 'er up!

THE Litchfield Review, of Saturday, Aug. 17, contains an interesting account of the killing of the first five victims of the Sioux war of 62, which took place just 33 years ago. The victims of the Indians were residents of Kandyohi County and Robinson Jones, who kept a tavern and sold groceries and liquor; Horace Baker, Virginus Webster, Mrs. Ann Baker, and Clara Davis Wilson. The article claims that Jones refused a party of Indians whiskey, afterwards he left the house in charge of Miss Wilson his niece while he went to a neighbor's Bakers where he and three others were killed. Miss Wilson being shot as the Indians passed the house on their return from Baker's. Many of our citizens can recall the scenes of '62, and remembers the Indians.

PROFESSOR BEMIS has been discharged from the chair of political economy, in the Chicago University. There seems to be some difference of opinion as to what should be taught. The President and the Professor seeing things differently. Whether there is a real difference in their views, or simply a disagreement because one is more politic than the other, is hard to say at this distance and with the meager information we have at our command. It would be a pity if a Professor of Political Economy should be so under the control of some rich donor to a school that he dare not express his ideas, nor take part in the political affairs of the country, though his views and his actions are satisfactory to all but the one wealthy donor. It will soon be in order for Legislatures to prohibit the donating of large sums of money to colleges, if the wealthy givers are to control the political teachings of the country as against the convictions of students who have given the best days of their lives to the solution of the questions of the times. Political science like any other branch of learning should be taught as it is understood. If some millionaire who believed in the old theory that the earth is flat should endow a chair in one of our leading colleges would he be allowed to effect the expulsion of the Professor of geography because he taught the pupils that the earth is round?

LYNCH LAW has been brought into force in Ohio. This don't justify its use any more than did the terrible burnings of negroes at the stake in some of the southern states a few years ago. At New Richmond, 25 miles up the river from Cincinnati, on Wednesday, a mob took Noah Anderson, a colored man, from the jail and hanged him for killing Franklin Fridman, nearly eighty years old. and president of the First National bank at that place. Just why people should let their angry passions rise, even in Ohio, and hang a negro, who, it is claimed was not right in his mind, rather than stand by the enforcement of the law in such cases is not quite clear except on the theory of race prejudice, and in Ohio it looks as if they ought to suppress that feeling if anywhere. Lynch law is wrong. The laws of the land should be upheld. And where they are wrong they should be rectified. The fact that lynch law is used anywhere tends to show the lack of faith in the prompt and efficient use of the laws of the country. When a murder is committed the public demands that punishment be meted out to the offender promptly; But when they look about and find in the jails all over the country, men who have been accused of wholesale murder, and others already convicted of the most henious crimes having their trials, and their sentences put off and commuted, from time to time: some of them altogether escaping punishment, it leads those desiring to see the laws enforced, to themselves do wrong, in hopes that right may come.

Lynch law should not be tolerated in any part of the United States or in any other country, but the wheels of justice should be oiled up so that they will run more smoothly, and truly, and in many cases more rapidly, so that whatever punishments are provided for crimes will be surely administered whenever it is certain who the criminal is, instead of deferred from time to time until the witnesses have forgotten so much that their stories may be made to appear conflicting; or until all parties connected with the wrong doing have died in accordance with natures laws.

Sacredness of Oaths.

When people take oaths they do so to strengthen their statements. When a man swears to a statement the statement is supposed to be as near to the truth as he can make it. But almost daily we see people taking oaths to things that are diametrically opposed to each other. Of course some allowance has to be made, as all people do not see things exactly alike. But when those whose duty it is to administer oaths do so in a flippant and irreverant manner it looks bad, and has a bad effect on the morals of those witnessing such scenes. There should be a law, and it should be enforced, that officers of the law whose duty or privilege it is to administer oaths should be careful to swear to nothing but what is true; and to acknowledge nothing for others but what is to the best of their knowledge and belief true. Yet many notaries and justices acknowledge the signatures of people to papers, as having been "signed, sealed and delivered in my presence" when, as a matter of fact, they have not seen the individuals for weeks, and perhaps never. People attach their names to important papers as witnesses to signatures of persons, saying "signed, in my presence," when they have not seen the person have a pen in his hand. The officer takes the acknowledgement to the same knowing these facts. Such things ought not to be and have a tendency to break down the sacredness of all oaths. This should be corrected.

Do What Your Hands Find to Do.

Many people complain that they have nothing to do. In a great country like ours, with such a variety of vocations to choose from, how can it be possible that an able bodied, honest, intelligent individual can have nothing to do? There is plenty of work that needs doing. There are plenty of people who want things done; but many have learned from experience the lesson taught by Benjamim Franklin. "If you would be well served, serve yourself." They have found so many people who are unthrifty, who are shiftless, and still drifting about from pillar to post, apparently without aim or object in life; that in order to keep their own business together they must attend to it themselves.

If young men and young women would early in life leard the lesson. "Do what your hands find to do," and practice it, when they see something that should be done, instead of shirking it off onto others, or waiting to be told to do it, they would do it freely of their own accord, they would soon find they had made themselves so necessary to the business they are in, whatever it may be, whether in the work shop or on the farm that everybody would say What an intelligent young person. What a bright boy or girl. And opportunities would soon begin to multiply for them to choose from. They would soon find a job that would suit them, and they would suit their employers. Life would be more pleasant for them. Let every boy and girl learn to "Do what your hands find to do."

High Schools.

Minnesota is taking a front rank in educational matters, with her common schools dotting every county and township over; her high schools in villages of a few hundred inhabitants; her universities and normal schools none can be much better supplied with facilities for acquiring an education than is the average Minnesota boy or girl. And when the schools are visited and it is found that many of the higher positions among instructors, teachers, and school officers are native Minnesotians, or those who have received their education within the borders of our own state; and in looking through the different professions and trades, and places of honor and trust many in each branch are found to have accumulated most of the knowledge they have in the schools of their native villages and, perhaps finished up at one of the universities. And when national meetings are held we read of our own citizens measuring up with the best the nation affords, in their chosen occupations then do we feel that the schools are being appreciated, that they are accomplishing that for which they have been provided.

Delano has a high school. Like others it has had its ups and downs. But for two years it has turned out a class of graduates. The school to open Sept. 9, is to be under the supervision of Prof. Charles S. Hawker, a young man born in our town; who received his early education in our public schools, who attended Carleton College at Northfield, and graduated last June at Hamline University. Mr. Hawker is known as an exemplary young man. He knows from experience what our school needs and with assistance of an able corps of teachers and the support of the scholars and patrons of the school we expect to see the Delano high school progress in the rank of high schools to the first class in the near future.

Newspapers Support the Town.

A remark was dropped the other day which leads us to believe that some people have the wrong conception of a newspaper. He said that it was a good town that would support four newspapers. We have always believed and do yet, that the newspapers support the town. A town without a newspaper would be like a town without a railroad, and even the Indians would steer shy of it.—St. Peter Journal.

Finances Retrograding.

Back in the fifties many of the present citizens of Minnesota left their homes to the eastward and sought for themselves and families new homes in far West. They came by boat, or by team, or even on foot to the territory. For forty years they have battled with difficulties as they have arisen. When they first arrived they found the dense woods and the broad prairies peopled with Indians. They had to depend on their own resources for a livelihood. Their money, if they brought any with them was soon gone and they had to use the money of the country to make their purchases. Those that came first bartered with the red men; they raised what they could and when more home seekers came they shared with them what they had to eat, for what the new comers brought with them that they could spare. Sometimes little or no money could be got hold of. The gingseng time came, when those living in the woods made most of tkeir purchases with "seng." The Indians frightened them away from their homes. The war took most of the able bodied men south. Times grew better. People could get money for what they had. There was a cash price for everything farmers had to sell. Though the money "Greenbacks," were not worth so much as gold. they took the place of gold; they were money; and when things were sold the money was paid. People were satisfied. When specie payment was resumed and greenbacks were worth the same as gold, times were still prosperous. But since money has grown scarce; since people generally, often find themselves with scarcely money enough in their pockets to get up a decent jingle they are dissatisfied. After spending so long a time in Minnesota as did the children of Israel in journeying to the promised land, it looks as if, in this time of progress, people should have money, and enough to do business; if with the facilities for transporting produce to the ends of the earth, there should be a cash price for every commodity; and money enough to pay the prices; That farmers could bring to market the surplus of their farms and sell for cash at once and not be obliged to dicker and take out in trade the little amount allowed for many of their salable products.

It seems as if money is as hard to get now as at any time in the history of the state, with abundance on hand little money is received. People must resort to the old time way of bringing to town instead of money a load of produce to make purchases. More money, is the cry of everybody. This ought not to be and we don't think can long continue with the present bountiful harvest on hand unless things are in a more desperate condition than most people are willing to believe.

Finances, in this age, aught not to turn backward on the dial, but to be up to what will satisfy all who have to trade.

Mc Gary Again.

INDEPENDENCE, Minn., Aug. 21st. 1895. EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE: Just at this time neighborhood news is rather scarce, for there is not much going on out in the country among the farmers.

The weather is fine and the corn and potatoes will soon be ripe.

Elder J. Raymond, of Eden Valley, is spending a few days with friends in Independence.

There were a good many Independence people attended campmeeting at Rockford last Sunday.

Next Tuesday, W. J. Peterson, of Independence, is summoned to appear at Minneapolis, before one of the Jewish Sanhedrems, in answer to a complaint made by the Munsel Printing Company, of Minneapolis, to recover $18, claimed by said company for a history of Hennepin county, in two volumns. Frank Lindsley, of Delano, and Howard, of Minneapolis, has been retained by the defense as attorneys to try the case. This, no doubt will be something of a test case.

There are many more of us fellows in Independence who are in the swim, and things may be lively before this thing is over. The people of this country are sore afflicted with humbugry now days it is found from precinct to the National capitol, in many forms. It first originated from way back when the devil humbuged Adam, in the garden of Eden, by telling him that big lie. The devil was no book agent; but he was a deceiver and a humbug. Perhaps I may have more to say about this farther on.

With the bids all in it looks as if Delano stood the best show of any of the towns represented. With as fine a site as the state affords; drainage perfect; good water; plenty of timber, meadow of the best quality; best grade farming land; brickyard near by; near two principle lines of railway; an hours ride to Minneapolis; her offer within the prescribed limits though the land offered costs much more even when secured by the citizens at a bargain it looks as if Delano certainly stood a fine show of securing the Hospital, esseically when added to this there is no state institutions in the county.

Don't condemn the county fair because for two years the best day was spoiled by rain. Say a good word for it and help make it a success. The large purses will bring good horses and if the generous purses and fast races are to be made a permanent feature the gate receipts must warrant the expense.—Howard Lake Herald.

Henry Watterson says that should Mr. Cleveland be nominated for a third term, he would not carry a county in the country. This is exaggerated of course, but there will be no chance to demonstrate it for he will not be nominated. The people do not look with favor upon the third term and would not tolerate it under any circumstance.—St. Peter Herald.

Armed Christian Endeavores.

Why not?

If it is a goodthing for Sunday Schools, why not for Christian Endeavores?

Think of a million Christian Endeavores—white endeavores and colored—armed with rifles, bayonets, swords, cannon and gatling guns—and a great Christian Endeavor Navy of ironclads, rams, and torpedoes.

What a power they could bring to convert the heathen to a knowledge of Christianity!

If it is good thing for the Sunday Schools, Why not for the Christian Endeavorers?

Daniel Webster on the Great West.

In a speech delivered in the United States Senate in 1844, with regard to the proposal that a mail service should be established between Missouri and the Pacific coast, Daniel Webster said: "What do we want with this vast, worthless area, this region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, of shifting sands and whirlwinds of dust, of cactus and prairie dogs? To what could we ever hope to put these great deserts, or these endless mountain ranges, impenetrable, and covered to their bases with impenetrable snow? What can we ever hope to do with the western coast, a coast of three thousand miles, rock-bound chearless and uninviting, with not a harbor on it? What use have we for such a country? Mr. President, I will never vote one cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific coast one inch nearer Boston than it is today."—The Daily Lancet.

It would seem that the startling thing about the new woman is her tendency to use a horse-whip instead of the old-time umbrella.

According to Gen. Coppinger's telegrams the Bannock Indians seemed to have pulled Jackson's Hole in after them. Indian wars nowadays are mostly fictions.

Queen Victoria's household is a large one, consisting of just under a thousand persons, for the maintenance of whom the nation sets apart the sum of $2,500,000 every year. Most of the offices are sinecures or fixtures for life.

The lowest temperature ever recorded on the earth was taken at Werchojansk, in the interior of Siberia, January 15, 1885. It was 90 degrees and a fraction below zero. There the earth is frozen to a depth of about 100 feet, and in the warmest season it never thaws.

Prof. McCook, of Yale, has been lecturing on "the pathological aspect of the tramp." He finds tramps wonderfully healthy as a class, and not so vicious as their appearance would indicate. The tramp life may be healthy for the tramper, but it is anything but good for the country or the people.

An interesting feature of the appointment of a woman sheriff in Missouri is the fact that in the courtroom it will be her duty to order all hats off. If the duties of feminine sheriffs could be extended to places of amusement a feminine sheriff would be chosen in many places where now a mere man holds the office.

A shoemaker at Greenwood, Me., has a pretty practical illustration of the manner in which history repeats itself—especially in matters of dress. His grandfather, father, uncle and himself were all shoemakers, and he has lasts used by them more than seventy-five years ago on which, if shoes were now made, they would imitate the peaked toe exactly.

Miss Analie Niesch arrived in Kansas City from Samoa. She had traveled 5,000 miles to marry her lover, Franz T. Harbert, a grocer of that city. Two years ago Miss Niesch and Harbert met on an ocean steamer for New Zealand and it was a case of love at first sight. The couple corresponded and upon Miss Niesch's arrival they were immediately married.

George Cromley, Cornelius Shay and John Ryan, iron-workers at Pittsburgh, claim to have discovered the lost art of welding copper to iron or steel. They show several samples of the metals perfectly welded. The last record history gives of these metals having been welded was in 500 B. C. The value of the discovery comes in the fact that copper offers greater resistance to the action of salt water than any other metal.

For several years Walter Winans, of Baltimore, has held the revolver championship of England, which is decided each year at the Risley National Rifle association meeting. At the meeting for this year Mr. Winans again won it, Mr. Joynt, the Irish champion, being second, and Lieut. Chitty, the champion of India, third. Mr. Winans also made the four best scores on record, two of them being the highest possible, and ten first prizes altogether fall to him.

The singular story comes from the other side of the Atlantic that the persistent drought has resulted in injury to all crops in Great Britain, the conditions being worse than any experienced since "the black year 1879." Usually the damage is the other way. The crops suffer from too much moisture instead of from lack of it, the position of the British Islands, right in the sweep of winds that have blown over the Gulf stream, causing the atmosphere of those islands to be normally surcharged with moisture.

A company formed some time ago to explore the mounds in the vicinity of Maysville, Ky., found, near May's Lick, eight skeletons, each incased in a strong box. It was the first discovery of stone burial in Kentucky, and, with the exception of several finds in Tennessee, the first in America. The party had dug up sixty-five skeletons, which, save a few, were representatives of a race antedating the Indians thousands of years. The digging was being done on a farm owned by the Fox family, and there were evidences of four quadrangular fortifications and over eighty mounds on the place.

It is one of the excellent Yankee notions of New England, the collection of vital statistics in a thorough manner. Those for 1892 have just been printed and contain some interesting information. It is a curious fact that just about one-half of the people of that section live in cities and towns having over 10,000 population. In this urban group the marriage rate per annum is twenty-one in the thousand, the birth rate thirty, and the death rate twenty-one, while in the rural group the marriage rate is sixteen in the thousand, the birth rate twenty, and the death rate nineteen.

The new woman has appeared in a new role. Mrs. Grath, of Chicago, has some property in her own right, and a husband who is living off her credit. She has advertised that she will not be responsible for the debts of her husband, and warns everybody not to sell goods on credit to him. Husbands have followed this rule from the dawn of civilization, and if the new woman is to take the place as supporter of the family, she ought to have the same right. If her husband will not work he should be compelled to live as thousands of women live, on what their husbands are willing to allow them.

READY FOR WORK.

Silver Democrats Formulate Plans for the Campaign.

Result of Their Conference at Washington—Text of an Address and Series of Resolutions Adopted—Work of Organization.

Washington, Aug. 16.—The corridors of the Metropolitan hotel were crowded early Wednesday with delegates to the conference of silver democrats called to meet there for the purpose of agreeing upon a line of policy to be pursued in the interest of silver in the democratic party. While the call for the conference issued by Senators Harris, Turpie and Jones, of Arkansas, did not specify the hour, the meeting was postponed until noon.

The meeting was called to order at 12 o'clock by Senator Harris, who moved that Senator Jones, of Arkansas, be made chairman and William C. Hinrichsen, of Illinois, secretary. This was done. Senator Jones, in opening, said that the conference had met in accordance with the call, which explained its purpose. He wanted to see a silver militia organized to cope with the gold forces. The roll call showed nineteen states represented, with the following number of delegates:

Virginia, 15; West Virginia, 2; Arkansas, 3; Colorado, 3; South Carolina, 1; North Carolina, 3; Illinois, 14; Florida, 4; Tennessee, 4; Alabama, 4; Ohio, 1; Georgia, 2; Missouri, 14; Indiana, 2, Delaware, 1; Maryland, 3; Kentucky, 1; Mississippi, 1, and North Dakota, 1.

On motion of Senator Daniel, of Virginia, the chairman appointed the following committee to prepare a programme of proceedings and resolutions, and report the same to the conference at an adjourned meeting to be held at 4 p. m.

Missouri, Gov. Stone and H. M. Hill; North Carolina, Senator Jarvis; Illinois, W. H. Hinrichsen; Indiana, A. W. Clarke; Georgia, ex-Senator Walsh; Alabama, J. F. Johnson; Tennessee, E. M. Carmack; Virginia, Senator Daniel; Kentucky, W. Woodson; Colorado, A. Newell; North Dakota, W. R. Bierby; Ohio, P. S Yoder; Delaware, J. F. Sanesbury; Maryland, M. M. Pullman; Mississippi, W. S. Stocksdale; South Carolina, J. F. Trentlen; West Virginia, J. J. Cromwell; Texas, ex-Representative Hare; Arkansas, Senator Jones, and Florida, J. S. Beard.

The conference reassembled at 4 o'clock. Senator Daniel, in accordance with the agreement reached by the committee on programme, reported progress and asked that the conference adjourn until 10 o'clock Thursday morning, at which time they expected to be able to report resolutions and an address to the party. The request of Senator Daniel met prompt compliance and the conference adjourned until 10 o'clock to-day.

When the committee reports were announced as complete shortly before noon, Senator Jones took the chair and Gov. Jones, of Missouri, presented the address. He announced that it was substantially the same as that partially adopted by the Texas silver convention and adopted in toto by the Mississippi convention.

Washington, Aug. 17.—Without a dissenting voice the delegates to the silver conference on Thursday adopted free coinage resolutions, appointed a provisional committee to perfect a national organization, made speeches anything but complimentary of the administration and adjourned sine die.

The Address.

The main portion of the address follows:

After explaining the call for the conference and declaring that it was "purely a voluntary assemblage and therefore does not speak with party authority" it proceeds as follows: "Profoundly conscious that the democratic party to-day confronts a crisis the most momentous in its history and fraught with far-reaching peril to the people and the country, we are assembled as individual democrats to take counsel together and for the undisguised purpose of inaugurating and promoting a thorough and systematic organization of the democratic masses, so that they may go forward as one man with a resolute purpose to rescue the old party, founded by Thomas Jefferson, from plutocratic domination.

"Therefore, with this object in view, this convention of American democrats, composed of representatives from twenty-two of the leading states of the union, make the following declaration on the monetary question which has been forced into the leading place among the issues of to-day. The federal constitution names silver and gold, together as the money metal of the United States. The first coinage law passed by congress under the constitution made the silver dollar the unit of value and admitted gold to free coinage at a ratio measured by the silver dollar unit.

"From the beginning of the government, following a policy formulated by Thomas Jefferson and firmly established by Jackson, the democratic party has been the party of bimetallism favoring the free coinage of both silver and gold at the national mints and opposed to farming out to banking corporations the government's sovereign power of issuing and controlling the money of the people.

Act of 1873.

"The act of 1873 demonetizing silver was surreptitiously passed without the approval or knowledge of the American people, and from the time when the effect of this act in fastening upon this country the single gold standard was understood the democratic party has consistently and persistently urged that the grievous wrong be righted.

"Failure to accomplish this object has resulted in the steady appreciation of gold and a corresponding fall in the price of commodities produced by the people, a heavy increase in the burden of all debts, public and private; the enrichment of the money-lending class; paralysis of industry and the impoverishment of the people and unexampled distress in all gold standard countries. Experience has shown that while under the single gold standard there may be an occasional revival of business activity accompanied by enhanced prices of a limited number of commodities, such revival is due to artificial and temporary causes and cannot permanently alleviate the sufferings due to the falling of prices brought about by the appreciation of gold and the inadequate supply of primary or redemption money.

"The rights of the American people, the interests of American labor and the prosperity of American industry have a higher claim to the consideration of the people's lawmakers than the greed of foreign creditors or the avaricious demands made by 'idle holders of idle capital.'

An Inalienable Right.

"The right to regulate its own monetary system in the interest of its own people is a right which no free government can barter, sell or surrender. This reserved right is a part of every bond, of every contract and of every obligation. No creditor or claimant can set up a right that can take precedence over a nation's obligations to promote the welfare of the masses of its people. This is a debt higher and more binding than all other debts and one that it is not only dishonest but treasonable to ignore.

"The land and its products are the basis of all developments and prosperity. The productive capacity of a country must be the basis of its credit. In opposing the policy of contraction, which must inevitably depreciate the values of land and its products, we are the supporters of property rights and sound credit and stand between the homes and estates of the people and the red flag of the auctioneer.

"The policy of gold monometallism has been characterized by repeated and disastrous financial panics. The farmers have found their prosperity and independence constantly waning under its blighting influences."

"Manufacturers are interested to oppose it, for they find the price of sale falling below the cost of production. Merchants should oppose it, for with the falling prices they are often compelled to sell for less than they paid for manufactured goods. Neither manufacturer nor merchant can prosper unless the mass of consumers realize such prices for their products and labor and supply themselves liberally with the necessities and luxuries of life, nor can the wage earner prosper, for under depressed conditions there is less and less compe ition for his labor.

Traditional Friend of Bimetallism.

"The democratic party is the traditional friend and champion of bimetallism. Its strength and power and popularity has been largely built upon its steadfast opposition to the demonetization of silver and its record of unwearied effort to restore it to its historic place as a money metal equal with gold. The effort at this late day to make it par excellence the champion of gold monometallism, the enemy of the policy it has upheld, and the defender of the crime it has denounced, is an effort to dishonor its record, its promises and its principles. The moment the democratic party is forced into this position it heaps obloquy on its own past and crowns its great adversary with glory and honor.

"Duty to the people requires that the party of the people continue the battle for bimetallism until the efforts are crowned with success; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the democratic party in national convention assembled should demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold into primary or redemption money at the ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for the action or approval of any other nation.

"Resolved, That it should declare its irrevocable opposition to the substitution for a metallic money of a panic-breeding corporation credit currency, based on a single metal, the supply of which is so limited that it can be cornered at any time by a few banking institutions in Europe and America.

"Resolved, That it should declare its opposition to the policy and practice of surrendering to the holders of the obligations of the United States the option reserved by the law to the government of redeeming such obligations in either silver coin or gold coin.

"Resolved, That it should declare its opposition to the issuing of interest-bearing bonds in the United States in time of peace, and especially to placing the treasury of the government under the control of any syndicate of bankers and the issuance of bonds to be sold by them at an enormous profit for the purpose of supplying the federal treasury with gold to maintain the policy of gold monometallism.

"With a view to securing the adherence to a re-adoption of the democratic financial policy above set forth by the democratic national convention to be assembled in 1896 and of the nomination of a candidate for the presidency, well known to be in hearty sympathy therewith, we hereby pledge our mutual cooperation, and urgently recommend to democratic brethren in all the states to at once begin and vigorously and systematically prosecute the work of a thorough organization, and to this end the adoption of the plan of organization herewith submitted is recommended."

Mr. Hill, of Missouri, moved the adoption of the address and resolutions, which were agreed to by a unanimous vote.

Plan of Reorganization.

The plan of organization recommended by the committee was outlined to the conference as follows:

"Believing that a large majority of the democratic voters of the United States are in harmony with the sent ments expressed in the foregoing address and knowing that a full and free expression of their views can only be ascertained and made effective through proper organization, we recommend the following plan of organization:

"First—There shall be a national committee of democrats who are in favor of both gold and silver as the money of the constitution, which shall be composed of one democrat from each state and the executive committee hereinafter provided for.

"Second—That until otherwise ordered by the national committee, Senators Harris, of Tennessee; Jones, of Arkansas; Turpie of Indiana, and Hon. W. J. Stone, of Missouri, and Hon. W. H. Hinrichsen, of Illinois, be and are hereby constituted the executive committee and shall have full power and authority and it shall be their duty at as early a day as possible to appoint the members of the national committee herein provided for and to fill vacancies in the same.

"Third—That said executive committee shall have full control and direction of the patriotic effort of the bimetallic democrats of the nation to secure in the next democratic convention the maintenance of the time-honored principles and policies of the democratic party."

After adopting the address and resolutions, and the plan of reorganization, the silver conference at 12:45 p. m. adjourned sine die.

A HERO'S FATE.

Painter of "Breaking Home Ties" Gives Up His Life.

Norristown, Pa., Aug. 16.—Thomas Hovenden, the famous artist, was instantly killed by a railroad train near here Wednesday evening, and it was in attempting to save the life of a little girl that he lost his own. The sacrifice of Mr. Hovenden's life was useless, because the child that he attempted to save also met her death beneath the wheels of the same engine.

[Thomas Hovenden was one of the leading artists of America. He was still in the comparative prime of his intellectual vigor and artistic skill, being but 59 years of age. His best-known painting, "Breaking Home Ties," has been engraved probably more than the work of any other American artist, and is a familiar object on the walls of thousands of homes in the United States. The painting was one of the most notable of the American groups at the world's fair. Mr. Hovenden leaves a wife, but no children.]

Holmes' "Castle" Burned.

Chicago, Aug. 20.—Holmes' notorious "castle," Sixty-third and Wallace streets, the place of murder and mystery, was almost destroyed by fire early this morning, the walls and part of the roof alone remaining. The origin of the blaze is almost as much a mystery as that of the one which partially wrecked it several years ago.

Just after midnight three explosions were heard and immediately fire burst from the windows. What caused the explosions is a mystery. The loss will be $25,000. The building was being remodeled as a museum to be stocked with relics of the man accused of many crimes.

Deep Waterways Association.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—Something like 20,000 invitations to states, provinces, municipalities, institutions of learning and organized bodies throughout the United States and Canada to attend its first annual convention at Cleveland, O., September 24 to 26, are being sent out by the International Deep Waterways association. In addition to the above, formal invitations are being sent to all state senators, members of congress, college and university presidents and to leading thinkers, economists and engineers to attend the convention as honored guests and participate in its discussions.

Three Hundred Killed.

London, Aug. 20.—The Daily News has a dispatch from Vienna which says that Trieste papers report that an explosion destroyed the artillery barracks at Toula, Russia, and that 300 men were killed, including many officers. The barracks were found to be completely undermined. Many arrests have been made.

Forest Fires in British Columbia.

A BUILDING WRECKED.

Many Persons Perish in Hotel Gumry at Denver.

Ruins Take Fire, the Work of Rescue Being Thus Seriously Impeded—A Lad's Incompetence Caused the Disaster.

Denver, Col., Aug. 20.—The Gumry hotel, Nos. 1725 to 1733 Lawrence street, was wrecked by a terrific explosion at 12:10 o'clock a. m. The rear half of the building, a five-story brick and stone structure, went down with a crash.

The hotel was crowded with guests and many of them must have been killed, as well as the entire force of hotel employes, who were sleeping in the portion of the building which fell.

On both sides of Lawrence, from Seventeenth to Eighteenth street, and on Larimer, directly back of the Gumry, the plate glass windows of the business houses were blown in and a number of pedestrians were injured by falling glass. The fronts of many buildings in the vicinity were badly wrecked.

At 12:50 the ruins were burning fiercely and the firemen were obliged to retreat from the work of rescue. Every engine in the city was pouring streams into the mass, but it was evident the flames could not possibly be gotten under control before many of the injured had been cremated.

As their chances of escape lessened the cries of the imprisoned people increased, heartrending shrieks rising from every portion of the great mass of wreckage.

Later Advices.

Denver, Col., Aug. 21.—A portion of the Gumry hotel, the scene of Sunday night's frightful disaster, is still standing, gaunt and sinister, constantly threatening to crash down upon those delving in the ruins at any moment. The search for victims has been carried on with the utmost energy. Flames broke out afresh in the wreckage Monday night and the fire engines were again pouring forth water, still further impeding the work of rescue. The list of dead and missing now numbers twenty-five, making the disaster the worst that ever occurred in this city.

Cause of the Explosion.

This, so far, is a definite knowledge of the people to be accounted for, but the hotel register shows people who have safely materialized, and some missing are not on the register. The latest obtainable information regarding the most terrible catastrophe that is recorded in Denver's history, clearly shows that a 17-year-old boy, Elmer Pierce, who was temporarily placed in charge of the boiler, was directly responsible for the accident. With the boiler almost at a red heat he injected cold water into the tubular affair, causing an immediate explosion. Strange to say, and by a miracle, he escaped unscathed, and was being hunted by an angry crowd of people, who would have dealt with him hastily had he been apprehended. He seems safe, however, as no clew has been unearthed as to his whereabouts.

Loss $75,000.

The terrible destruction wrought by the explosion is in evidence everywhere within three blocks of the scene. Stores in the neighborhood have their fronts demolished or windows damaged. Along Larimer street, in the rear of the building, there is not a whole plate-glass for a block and Lawrence street in the front shows similar signs of demolition. To estimate the damage and loss is very difficult, especially as no insurance papers are available, they having all been lost in the fire; but the loss will hardly exceed $75,000.

London, Aug. 19.—A meeting of the members of parliament favorable to currency reform was held in the house of commons Friday. Lorna, Dorington, Valentia, Vessey-Thompson, Bhonnaggre, Disraeli, Sam Smith and Provand were present. It was resolved to form a parliamentary committee, its members being engaged to promote an international conference for the purpose of considering what measures can be taken "to remove or mitigate the evils resulting from the fluctuations growing out of the divergence in the relative value of gold and silver."

THE GIFTS.

Life, thou wast rich with promises;
What dost thou give?
What precious boon hast thou to show and say:
"Take this and live?"

For when the glory lay on far, blue hills,
On rocks and trees,
Thou said'st: "The beauty of the coming years
Behold in these."

Or when the air was full of rushing winds
Or rain's soft symphony,
Thou said'st: "These utter great, mysterious things
That are to be."

Now give! Give love, perhaps. But, "No," Life said:
"Though Love must be
And Love is fair—ay, wondrous fair is Love—
'Tis not for thee."

Then Fame! Oh Life, since thou deniest me Love,
Let me have Fame!
Sweet were the voice of praising multitude
That spoke my name.

Lo, the grand pity in the face of Life!
"But few there are
(Alas, how very few!) who climb that height—
Lofty and far."

Still Joy is left for me? "Child, dost thou know
How Joy is brief?
None may the birthright of the race forego,
And that is Grief."

Not Love, nor Fame, nor Joy! What gift is left Worthy to take?
Not one: no single one! Life, get thee gone!
Let my heart break.

Life smiled a noble smile. "The best of all
To all I give—
Duty and Use! These are the gifts I bring.
Take these, and live!"

A SUBURBAN EXPERIENCE

BY MRS. M. L. RAYNE.

"It isn't because I am tired of our flat that I want to live in the suburbs, but the doctor says we both need change," concluded Mrs. Perry Thorne, who was making her first plea for country life.

"I agree with the doctor that we need change of one sort at least," answered her husband.

"Don't be flippant, dear. I am in dead earnest; and oh, Perry, I know of such a dear cottage, one of a row."

"I dislike rows," said Perry. "However, if you are determined to be a suburbanite, and with the suburbanites stand, I may as well agree to go. I will at once take lessons on the flying trapeze so that I may sometimes be able to catch a train. I shall study to acquire that dazed suburban stare that people who eat their breakfasts and dinners by lamplight assume, assisted by catching their quota of sleep in depots after they have missed the train."

"Oh, we won't be there long enough for that," said his wife; "and, Perry, the air is just heavenly—so sustaining."

"That's good, as we shall probably be twelve miles or more from a grocery store. Have you caught your house yet, Maud?"

"Oh, yes. Mrs. Smead has one in the same row, and she told me about ours. It is the southwest corner house, while hers is the southeast. Isn't it strange, Perry, that I have never been introduced to Mr. Smead? I wouldn't believe there was any such person if I had not seen him."

"Nothing strange about it," growled Perry, in what his wife called his "bulldog" voice. "I suppose you want to know him because he has the reputation of being a lady killer."

"Perry!"

"I am told by fellows we both know that he prides himself on his beauty."

"I hate beauty-men," said Maud, soothingly, "they are all vain, conceited creatures. I never would marry a handsome man."

Perry mumbled something and went away, first giving his wife permission to do as she pleased about taking the suburban house.

A week later both families were settled in the row which fronted a street and a railroad track, and was equi-distant from two depots.

Mr. Smead did not take as kindly to the change as Perry Thorne did, but he told his wife, thoughtlessly, that one good feature of suburban life was having the Thornes for neighbors.

"Where have you ever met Mrs. Thorne?" asked his wife, suspiciously.

"Don't know her from Adam, my dear, but isn't she your friend, and haven't I heard her praises sung ever since we were married?"

"H'm! We have a calling acquaintance, and now we are to be neighbors. I suppose you will meet. But you are so susceptible, and she is so giddy, I just know you will set people talking."

"Great Cæsar, Laura, you give your best friend a great send off! I susceptible and she giddy? We must be made for each other!"

Mrs. Smead looked volumes at her husband, but where is the man who does not enjoy being a bone of contention among his women-folk, and if Smead had a special and particular virtue, it was that of being good natured.

Mrs. Smead, like the woman of history, had two treasures—her sewing machine and her husband, and she drew the line at lending either, and if people wanted to call her selfish they might. Fortified by this law she rented the southwest cottage.

Saturday night! The invisible bridge spans the distance between the world of labor and the world of rest. The tranquil air gave back no murmur of the multitudinous voices that had filled it with cries of sorrow, anger, or gladness during the work days of the past week. It was the ante-chamber of the Sabbath, a time so sacred to our ancestors that all work and all pleasure was suspended, that the soul itself might rest.

A great throng of people was hurrying homeward, and all bore the happy burdens of Saturday night—new shoes for the little burden-bearers, a new bonnet for mother, the Sunday dinner—and among them Perry Thorne and Amos Smead, who had struck up a neighborly acquaintance, and were now hastening to the same train, going out to their suburban homes for their first Sabbath of rest. They were both laden to the ears with brown paper packages and had just time to make the train, after purchasing their commutation tickets. They went loping through the gates in approved suburban style, and caught on just as the train moved out, and then Perry shouted in a voice that sounded above the roar of escaping steam:

"We've left our Sunday dinners on the window stand of the ticket office. You go on, Smead, and I'll take the next train out."

He swung himself clear off the train, turned a somersault, and waved "all right" to Smead, who mopped the cinders and perspiration from his face and remarked to the man standing next to him, in a friendly way:

"Nice way to spend the summer, living in the suburbs?"

"Yes, if you don't care what you say," growled the man.

Then Smead took a bit of pasteboard from his pocket and began to study it.

"Southeast corner, Terrace row, Oakland."

Smead asked his gruff neighbor if he got off at that station.

"No, I don't," said the man. "You couldn't hire me to live in that swamp. I go out ten miles further, where you don't have to sift the atmosphere to keep the mosquitoes from choking you."

That sounded discouraging, but Smead was not anxious to ride ten miles further on an accommodation train, that slowed up for every cow on the track, and he wrapped himself in a speculative reverie until the brakeman called "O-a-k-l-a-n-d!" as if only the deaf lived at that station.

Mrs. Smead was waiting for her husband, whom she expected on the half-past six train, but the train had come and gone, and instead of the handsome, well-groomed Mr. Smead, a frantic woman, her neighbor, Mrs. Thorne, rushed into her cottage.

"I've caught him!" she gasped. "He's locked up in the library! Oh! oh! oh!"

"Caught whom?" asked the mystified woman. Then seeing that her distracted visitor was very near fainting, she collected restoratives and brought back Mrs. Thorne's scattered wits.

Maud explained as soon as she could speak that a desperate looking man, a burglar, she was certain, and a convict as well, by the cut of his hair—had feloniously entered her house a moment before she came, and walking boldly into her library had been locked safely therein by herself.

"The windows are nailed down; I have been waiting for Perry to open them, so he cannot escape that way," she concluded.

"I expect Amos on the last train. I don't see what is keeping him," said Mrs. Smead, "but he has not come yet."

"Neither has Perry, but perhaps they will come together. Isn't it dreadful? I daren't go back with that man in the house. I know by his looks he's a murderer. Our girl hasn't come, and I'm all alone. Oh, if Mr. Smead were only here?"

"I guess I'll do just as well," said Mrs. Smead, coldly. "I will take our revolver, and you can bring the stove-lifter, and we will interview him through the door."

"But what good will that do? He may s-h-o-o-t first!"

"Come on," said Mrs. Smead, contemptuously. She was only a young matron herself, but she was not going to be ignominiously routed by a one-man army, and she led the way to her neighbor's cottage. No other people lived in the row, so they had all the fun to themselves.

But at that identical moment the seven-forty train, sometimes called the "husbands' train," so many of them went out to spend the week's interval with their families, stopped at the nearest depot, and Perry Thorne, with his double load of packages, hove in sight. Both women were overjoyed to see him.

"What's the row?" he asked, dropping his bundles on the veranda.

"A man!" said both women at once.

"Where is Smead?"

"That is what I would like to know," said Mrs. Smead; "I expected him on this train."

"I haven't seen him. Who is the man?"

"A burglar, and he's locked up in the library. Don't you think I was brave?" asked Maud, who, now that her husband had come, felt that she might pose as a heroine.

"Burglars already? Ha! this is a diversion. Give me the key, Maud. I'll take your revolver, Mrs. Smead. Now, ladies, stand aside," and Perry made a valiant rush for the library door, which he unlocked and threw open, at the same presenting arms according to the best manual practice.

"Don't shoot!" cried a familiar voice that trembled, not with fear, but merriment, as Mr. Smead stepped smilingly forward, and bowed low to Maud: "I am Mrs. Thorne's captive," he said.

"What does this mean?" demanded Mrs. Smead in the measured syllables of the divorce court.

"It means," explained Mr. Smead, "that my wife has not yet learned to box the compass. She gave me 'southwest' and your wife locked me up in a room that has no ventilation, and under a criminal ban. But I forgive her," he added, with gallant protest, whereat Maud's cheeks grew red with embarrassment, and Mrs. Smead said:

"Come home! After this I will meet you at the train and see that you don't get into the wrong house."

"Do forgive me, Mr. Smead," said Maud, penitently, while Perry glared darkly like a jealous stage lover, "but you did look so—so—"

"She said you looked like a convict," remarked his wife.

"At least it has made us acquainted," observed Mr. Smead, true to his colors, and with this parting shot he followed his wife to the "southeast" cottage.—Detroit Free Press.

Watching Wild Turkeys Feed.

A writer in Bee Gleanings thus describes a troop of wild turkeys on a marsh in Missouri. He said they started out in the morning like a regiment of soldiers, taking the fields and woods, and everything that came before them, each turkey marching perhaps twenty feet from its neighbor. They went away every morning, and generally came in an hour before sundown, keeping up the same line of march in all their raids. About an hour before sundown they emerged from the woods, in a long line, all abreast. As they went over the pasture lot every cricket, grasshopper, bug and worm was pretty sure to be detected by their keen, sharp eyes, and you could see them do their work as they moved forward. Of course, they got into the cornfields some, but it is generally considered that they do enough good in their march to atone for the corn they take, for corn is cheap down in Missouri.

—The haunts of happiness are varied and rather unaccountable, but I have more often seen her among little children, and home firesides, and the country houses, than anywhere else—at least I think so.—Sydney Smith.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Discharged.

Edward P. Long, a local jeweler; N. J. Stelchen, a lumber dealer, and H. C. Ervin, secretary of the Irleston Milling company, were on trial in Judge Martin's court at St. Cloud on a charge of disturbing the peace one night recently, at which time some 50 bicyclists, among whom this trio took a prominent part, "playing horse" with the new bicycle ordinance, by promenading the streets of the city on wheels, with cow bells, and otherwise making the night air ring with shouts of defiance. The trio demanded a jury trial and a list of 36 was gone through before the 12 were selected. Both the prosecution and defense had able attorneys and the case was fought for all there was in it. The case was given to the jury and in half an hour a verdict of not guilty was brought in. Wheelmen are jubilant and feel that they have scored a big point. The case will cost the city in the neighborhood of $100.

The Park.

The Minnesota commission appointed to report on the proposed interstate park has been in session at Taylor's Falls and finished its work. The secretary, George H. Hazzard, said that the commission would file its report with the governor and state auditor Monday. It is reported that there were 301 different pieces of property to be acquired, making 110 acres, and that there were 487 different owners of the land to be condemned, and that the assessments to these amounts to less than $6,000. This makes Representative Aug. Anderson, Senator F. A. Hodge and the local park committee feel good, as it proves the truth of their respective representations to the assessed valuation for taxation purposes, which was $6,400, which included 12 or 13 houses with many other structures.

Increase of Insanity.

Secretary Hart, of the state board of corrections and charities, figured up the increase in insanity in this state since 1863. He finds that the state had but 11 insane people in that year. It doubled in the following four years, again in the next five years. Doubled a third time in the next seven years, and in the last period it has taken nine years to double. Altogether it has doubled eight times since Minnesota became a state. The population of the asylums at the end of the last fiscal year was 2,781.

Labor Convention.

Labor Commissioner Powers has issued the call for the 11th annual convention of the national association of the officials of bureaus of labor statistics and kindred offices in the United States. The convention will be held at Minneapolis, Sept. 17 to 19. Addresses will be delivered by Hon. Carroll D. Wright, president of the association, and by Gov. Clough, Mayor Pratt, of Minneapolis; Hon. W. W. Folwell, Hon. H. G. Wadin, of Massachusets; Hon. H. H. Hart, of St. Paul, and others.

Receiver Wanted.

Application has been made for the appointment of a receiver for the Standard Ore Company of Duluth. Recently the Standard Company assigned to the Minnesota Iron Company, who held a claim of $55,000 against its leases of two valuable iron mining properties, the Cincinnati and the Hale mines. The creditors now claim that this was done to give the Minnesota Irom Company a preference, and have petitioned the court to set the leases aside.

Suits Begun.

The county commissioners have commenced suit against the insolvent Citizens' Bank of Redwood Falls, and the sureties on the bank's bond, for a little over $3,000, money on deposit to the credit of the county at the time the bank closed its doors. All of the bondsmen appear to be willing to make good the county's claim as soon as it is learned what the insolvent bank will pay. The bank is in the hands of the Northern Trust Company, of Minneapolis.

News in Brief.

While engaged in digging the race for the dam at St. Hilaire a few days ago, the workmen unearthed what may prove a valuable find. It was found in large quantities and is probably mica, although experts have not yet passed on it. The substance is as clear as crystal, and has the micacious faculty of splitting in sheets. The mineral was struck about 10 feet from the surface, and is supposed to be plentiful, as it was thrown out by the workmen in great pieces.

The Duluth, Missaba & Northern Railway Company filed its special report with the secretary of the state, showing the number of shares of stock issued up to the 31st of July, as being 25,125. During last year there were issued 58 1-3 shares at par value to pay for services rendered, amounting to $5,833.33.

The threshing engine boiler of an outfit owned by Joseph Cartier, exploded three miles from Hugo, Anoka county. Cartier was literally torn to pieces and his father fatally injured. The coroner of Anoka county was summoned.

August Lahti, a Finn trainman at the Aurora mine at Virginia, was killed by being buried by a fall of ore caused by a blast.

The earnings of the state grain inspection department for July amounted to $9,710.86.

The school board of Rochester has purchased for $5,000 the business college for the use of the high school, which has been much overcrowded in its present quarters.

Chris Weiner, a watchman on the Northern King, made a bold and brutal assault on Marie Rocco, an Italian emigrant, after the arrival of the vessel at Duluth.

J. K. Harris, who was arrested in Winona last week, was given 20 days in the county jail at Red Wing for obtaining money under false pretenses. There is but little doubt that he is the man wanted in New York, and for whose arrest $2,500 reward is offered.

Hilyer Finger, a section hand on the C. M. & St. P. Road, was run over by a freight train and his left leg was so badly crushed that amputation was found necessary. The accident happened at Grand Crossing, near Winona. He is 52 years old and has a wife and five children.

The Duluth, Mississippi & Northern Railroad Company, which has a line of road on the western Mesaba range, filed a trust deed at Duluth, for $2,500,000. The deed runs to the Central Trust Company, of New York. The road is owned by Wright and Davis, of Saginaw, Mich.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—The Church of God in Christ has a following of 471 members in eighteen societies. They have three churches, valued at $1,600.

—Father Richard Henebry, an Irishman, and a Maynooth graduate, has been appointed professor of Keltic in Bishop Keane's Catholic university at Washington.

—The Life and Advent union, a religious denomination, has twenty-eight societies and a membership of 1,018. They worship in seven churches, valued at $16,790.

—Bishop Newman finds that religion has been greatly benefited by the hard times, the Methodist church alone gaining over one hundred thousand members since the beginning of the financial depression.

—There are seventeen different branches of Methodism in this country, each having a distinctive name, its own church property, its own organization, its own places of worship and its own body of membership.

—France proposes to decentralize its university. M. Poincarre, minister of education, presents a scheme to parliament by which the "academies" in the principal towns will take the name of universities, each to have its separate revenues, while the state receives the fees for examinations and degrees.

—Cardinal Ruffo Scilla, who died the other day, was head of the princely family of Ruffo di Calabria. His death leaves only three Cardinals who are lay princes in the sacred college. Cardinal Hohenlohe, brother of the German chancellor; Cardinal Bonaparte, grandson of Lucien, and senior Bonaparte, and Cardinal Schonborn, archbishop of Prague.

—The annual statement of the American Baptist Missionary union shows that the total receipts for the year were $577,842; the debt April 1, 1894, was $203,596; the appropriations were $564,200, making a total of $767,796. The debt thus is $189,954, of which amount $9,374 is from the Gordon Memorial fund. Of the total amount received $331,086 was from donations, $77,043 from legacies, and $109,658 from the women's societies.

—A strong movement has developed in the Scandinavian Lutheran church in Minnesota for the adoption of English as the official language of the church organization, and for the total abandonment of the use of the old tongue. Many prominent members are convinced that only by the adoption of the English language in the church can the younger generation, which was either born or brought up in this country, be kept within the Lutheran fold. An organization has been formed by the progressive ministers and elders to secure the change.

—King Menelik of Abyssinia is founding a large library at Abbis Abeba, and collecting all the old Ethiopian books he can find. According to tradition, when the Somalis invaded Abyssinia in the sixteenth century all the books belonging to the emperor were hidden on an island in Lake Zuai, in southern Shoa. In December last Menelik sent a fleet of rafts to the island, where the hidden books were actually found. The natives could not read them, but kept them as religious objects. The manuscripts were left with them, but copies were ordered for the new library.

—There are in the San Francisco high school twin girls who are remarkable for their mental and physical development, and the exception they present to the rule that one twin is usually the inferior of the other in mind or body. In person the girls resemble one another so closely that very few people can distinguish between them, and there is less than one per cent. difference in their school records. They have taken up French and German outside their high-school course, are proficient in music, and draw and paint well. They expect to take a college education at the University of California, and the "Hohfeld girls," as they are called, are expected to stand high in their classes.

DANGER OF MENTAL STRAIN.

Serious Disorders Resulting From Too Much Brain Work.

Intellectual work does not injure health or shorten life, but mental overwork, when associated with emotional strain, is often a cause of nervous breakdown and disease.

Health and life are sometimes lost through forgetfulness of the fact that mental strain is dangerous to those in or past middle life who attempt brain-work to which they have not been accustomed.

If not subjected to excessive mental or physical strain, public and professional men, although afflicted with organic diseases, may live in comfort and do a moderate amount of work for many years.

Among physicians, lawyers and journalists the performance of brain work under pressure for time and bad hygienic conditions, is a common cause of ill health.

Comparatively few clergymen succumb completely to mental overwork, although many of them suffer from a mild, annoying form of nervous exhaustion.

The danger to the scientific worker usually arises from too intense and prolonged activity of the mind in one direction. It springs largely from the fascination it has for its votaries. The system of severe competitive examinations in many communities saps the health of teachers and pupils.

Chronic nervous exhaustion is not common among men prominent in public affairs and in the professions. Such men are, however, sometimes the victims of a severe acute nervous prostration.

The warnings of mental overwork and overstrain vary, but certain psychical symptoms and such physical symptoms as laxity or immobility of countenance, diminished resisting power, heart failure, sleeplessness, cervico-occipital pain or distress and dyspepsia are of most frequent occurrence.

Insanity in some forms is often developed by overstrain of the nervous systems.

Phthisis, diabetes and Bright's disease, next to insanity, are among the diseases most likely to be developed by mental overwork. Men in whose families phthisis is hereditary should carefully guard against such overwork.

Overtaxing the mind and nervous system may be the exciting cause of almost any serious disorder to which chance, accident, imprudence or infection exposes the individual.—N. Y. Ledger.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Mountain House Pudding: Nearly one quart of apple sauce, four eggs, one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, one orange, rind and juice. Sprinkle little powdered sugar over the top. Bake an hour.—Farm and Fireside.

—Mock Bisque Soup: Boil and strain two pounds of tomatoes. Scald one quart of milk, to which has been added one pint of clam juice. Brown slightly one tablespoonful of cornstarch in two tablespoonfuls of butter; then stir slowly into the hot milk. Boil all for five minutes, season, and when ready to serve add the strained tomatoes.—N. Y. World.

—Collared Mackerel: Bone the mackerel and sprinkle with salt, pepper, a tablespoonful of allspice, chopped onion and parsley; roll them up and place in a pan; pour over them enough water and vinegar, mixed, to cover them; let them boil gently for an hour; keep them in the pickle and serve cold. They may be baked instead of boiled. —Harper's Bazar.

—Orangeade or Lemonade: Squeeze the juice, pour boiling water on a little of the peel, and cover close; boil water and sugar to a thin sirup and skim it. When all are cold, mix the juice, the infusion, and the sirup with as much more water as will make a rich sherbet; then strain. Or, squeeze the juice and strain it, then add to it water and capillaire.—Farmers' Voice.

—Meat Jelly: Take pieces of cold meat—ham, beef, etc., that have been left over—three-quarters of a cupful. When hashed fine add four small spiced gherkins, cut in fine pieces, and half a box of gelatine, soaked in half a cup of cold water till soft. Add boiling water, one pint, half a cup of spiced vinegar from the pickles—more if the vinegar is not strong. Stir in the meat and pickle. Pour in the molds. Serve when hard. — Chicago Record.

—Swiss Soup: One quart of milk, a little chopped onion, one tablespoonful of flour, salt and pepper to taste, two eggs. Put the milk on to boil with the onion; rub the flour smooth with a little cold milk reserved from the quart, and add to the milk. Boil for about ten minutes, stirring often; season with salt and a sprinkling of cayenne. Beat the eggs light and put into the tureen, pour the boiling soup over it, and serve at once with sippets of toast.—Boston Budget.

—How to Wash Print Dresses: Slice half a pound of the best pale yellow soap and pour over it enough boiling water to make a thick jelly; stir this into a couple of gallons of water, just warm, and then wash the dress in it. No dry soap must be rubbed on it or it will look patchy; thorough washing in the suds is the only thing that is necessary. Have another pan ready containing two gallons of cold water and a handful of salt; rinse in this and hang out to dry at once. This quantity of soap will be sufficient for a couple of dresses, or three or four little frocks. —Leeds Mercury.

SUMMER HOUSEKEEPING.

How to Do the Cooking With Little Heat and Annoyance.

Housekeepers must not forget that during the heated months thought and care must be given to the cellar. Keep the windows tightly closed during the day. Open them in the evening or at night. This will keep the cellar dry. As the walls are cool, the hot air of the day will condense upon them and cause moisture. In this condition the cellar is scarcely a place for keeping food stuffs, as the dampness causes mold. It is also time to give up using large stoves or ranges and substituting smaller ones which will do the same amount of work, with greater comfort. Cooking by gas is so extensively practiced that I need scarcely rehearse the economy and durability of this method. Thousands of gas stoves are in use, and when once placed are in to stay, and with care they are more economical than coal. Persons in the country manufacturing their own gas can use the same stove they have used in the city. Roasting and baking may be done at the same time, thus saving heat and gas. In far country places where it is impossible to use gas the next best thing is an oil stove. The points of danger in these stoves have been greatly removed. Accidents occur only with careless people. I am referring now strictly to oil, not gasoline stoves. The latter are always more or less dangerous, as this material is highly inflammable and explosive. The four-burner stove, containing an oven fourteen by sixteen, is quite large enough to do the cooking for a family of twelve. Sectional saucepans should be used for vegetable cooking, or a patent cooker will give you two or three vegetables over a single burner. Waffles and cakes can be baked just as well as over a coal stove.—Household News.

Summer Petticoats.

Altogether the most satisfactory petticoats to wear under light summer gowns are those made of white nainsook, a good quality of which may be purchased for twenty-five cents the yard. Three breadths should be used, and there should be two or three four-inch ruffles around the bottom. Over these a wide full flounce is placed, and in this way a flaring effect is produced. A narrow edging of lace on the ruffles and a wider trimming of the same lace on the flounce add beauty to the petticoat, and if point de Paris is used, or Valenciennes (what is known as Platte Val), the cost is only slightly enhanced. The price of such a garment, ready made, is ten dollars, and even at that price is not always to be found, while it may be made at home for three dollars or less. India linen or Lonsdale, at twelve cents per yard, are good fabrics to use, but nainsook, although so light and fine, is strong and wears well. If one or two cords are run in the hems of the ruffles they will flare better and are quite as easily laundered.—Boston Herald.

—Gold was found in the western part of Oklahoma a few weeks ago, and a rush for the new gold fields set in which entirely eclipsed the recent wild scramble for the Kickapoo lands. The town of Arapahoe was almost deserted in a day, and the farmers and cowboys have deserted their farms and ranches for many miles around and joined the merchants in the rush for the diggings. Couriers returning to Guthrie report the finding of gold in paying quantities to be a fact. The finds have mostly been in the hill country fifteen miles southwest of Arapahoe; is in the mid-western portion of the territory.

AN HOUR TOO LATE.

The Colonel Pulled on the Wrong String and Lost.

The colonel wanted to buy a piece of land bordering on the Arkansas river and owned by a queer old fellow named Allport. The tavern keeper posted us on his eccentricities, and cautioned us particularly that he believed the world was flat and would not sell to any one who disputed him. We found the old man seated on a stump and fishing in a creek near his cabin, and when the object of the visit had been stated he inquired:

"Stranger, what's your religun?"

"Baptist," replied the colonel, according to programme."

"What's yer politics?"

"Haven't got any."

"Do you think we orto annex Mexico?"

"I do."

"If you was on a jury and a feller was on trial fur pickin' up a few sawlogs in the river, how would you go—fur or agin him?"

"I'd vote to acquit him, of course. When sawlogs break loose and go floating down stream they are common property."

"That's so! That's as true as gospel!" exclaimed the old man. "Stranger, I wish you was goin' to settle around these parts. I like a man who talks plump up and down as you does. So you want to buy land? Shouldn't a bit wonder if we could dicker. Be you a temperance man?"

"Oh! no! I get drunk whenever I feel like it, and I always keep four gallons of whisky in the house."

That's it! That's bewtiful! If we had five men like you around yere we'd run the county. Yes, I expect you kin hev that land at my sellin' price, which is three thousand dollars."

"When can you make out the papers?" asked the colonel.

"Oh! to-day, I reckon. Stranger, do you believe in wimmin's rights?"

"No, sir!"

"That's bewtiful! Yes, I think we kin git the papers made out to-day. Kunnel, can't you arrange to settle down yere? How about Jonah and the whale?"

"I don't believe Jonah was swallowed."

"Bewtiful—bewtiful! I think I kin let you have that land for two thousand five hundred dollars. What do you think about this world, Kunnel—is she round or flat?"

"Flat as a pancake, of course!" promptly replied the colonel.

"Do you believe it?"

"Of course. A man who says it's round is either a liar or an idiot. Shall we go over to the county seat this afternoon?"

"Not by a blamed sight!" exclaimed the old man. "You couldn't hev that land fur twenty thousand dollars!"

"But why?"

"Bekase you believe the world is flat!"

"But, don't you?"

"No, sir! I did up to about an hour ago, when the back end of my cabin settled down two feet and killed my dawg and skeared the old woman half-to-death. Then I made up my mind the world was round and I'd been fool 'nuff to locate this farm jist about whar' two inches more of tip will boost the hull caboodle of Allports into Chiny! Sorry fur you, kurnel, but you orter got yere about an hour sooner, while I was hangin' onto the flatness of things and achin' to meet as big a fool as I was!"—Detroit Free Press.

Pearls.

From the most ancient times, pearls seem to have been highly valued for purposes of adornment. Twenty-two centuries before the Christian era, the Chinese cultivated the pearl mussel, and at this day they are ahead of other nations in this respect. Carefully opening the valves of the freshwater mussel, the operator inserts small pieces of wood, sometimes carved into fantastic images, which in the course of a year or two are coated with a deposit of pearl. The largest known pearl in the world is one in the Kensington (England) museum, weighing three ounces, and being four and a half inches in circumference; the most perfect one is in the Moscow (Russia) museum, weighs 28 carats, and is a perfect globe. The principal fisheries for sea pearls are in India, and the Persian Gulf, though the Australian coasts are developing strongly. Freshwater pearls are found in many rivers of our own country, the best being on the Little Miami, in Ohio, where they are worked systematically. Pearls have also been found at various points on the Wisconsin, and at Lytle, on the Black River, both localities being easily reached by the fast and elegant trains of the Burlington Route, the Mississippi River scenic line. ## DELANO DIARY

--The Board of Education has postponed the time for beginning the fall terms of the Public School to Monday Sept 9.

--W. D. Freeman has our thanks for a fine head of cualiflower. We also sampled his tomatoes the best we have seen this season.

—You can fine an assortment of writing material at the GAZETTE office. Paper and Envelopes, Fools Cap, Legal Cap, Note Paper, Etc. & Etc.

—The base ball game that was to have been played on the 18th inst. between the Delano Blacks and the Waverly 1st nine did not come off. The Waverly team divided up and played elsewhere.

--There was a difficulty concerning eight dollars and some cents, occurred on the street this morning. After the usual preliminaries and a couple of rounds, without gloves the question was still unsettled. There is from appearances, to be an assault and battery case, right away, pretty soon.

—The prospectus of the cotton exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., and a programme of the Minnesota Editorial excursion are at hand. This will prove an enjoyable occasion for those who can take time, and a very little money, to have a week's vacation and visit a part of this great country that many never have seen.

—The frost of last week has left the marks on the corn; the dried and crumpled blades tell plainly that they have been chilled. It is claimed that there has been a frost every month, so far, this year. Several nights during the week past has the thermometer fell to below 40, but no serious damage has been done crops as yet.

--A large number of Delanoites attended camp meeting at Rockford on Sunday. We were there in the afternoon and herd a part of an able sermon by Rev. Hatch, of Minneapolis the blind preacher, T. P. Giddings of Annoka, sang a solo, and the Hoisingtons aided in singing which was, of course, fine. The audience was a large one. Sunday was the last day of the meeting.

—The last legislature amended the liquor law so that the people can not legally send children after beer, but yet boys of ten or twelve years of age go into saloons, buy beer and carry it to the place of busisness of men who are on the bonds of the saloon keeper, and in some instances on the village council. One of these days somebody will get tired of this and there will be an awakening among people who have no respect for law or no law.

—At the meeting held at the City Hall Monday evening to futher plans for securing the Fourth Hospital for Insane at this place. Considerable enthuseism was manifested. There was quite a number present. The committee reported that options had been secured on enough land at prices so that we can offer the site to the State for $19,000. This is $4,000 more than the appropriation made to buy the site with, but in consideration of the advantages of the Delano site in the way of good land, in a good location, well drained, and the fact that there is no asylum on the line of the G. N. or the Soo, it was thought the committee would prefer our site, at what it could be bought for, to taking one in a place where nobody cares to make home, if they can get it for nothing.

A bond in the sum of $25,000 was signed by about twenty citizens and it is expected others will sign it, agreeing to furnish 640 acres of land for $19,000 to the state for the Hospital perposes.

--Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

--Teacher's examination in Delano on Friday, Aug. 30.

—A socicable will be held by the Christian Endeavor society Tuesday evening.

—Our hardware men are laying in a supply of stoves as if they expected some cold weather before long.

—Chas. Conzet has been to Minneapolis buying harness, collars, fly nets, & etc. which he will sell very cheap.

—C. M. Conzet has a second handed double driving harness to trade for a second handed double work harness.

—Photographs at Delano 4th, 5th and 6th of every month. Don't forget date. Satisfaction guaranteed.

46tf. C. W. CURRIER.

—John Borrell is painting the interior of Young's Hotel which will make it considerably more attractive to the traveling public.

—If you need your shoes mended see John Coolen and tell him you read in the GAZETTE that he had shoe shops for sale. This is no joke.

—Why use "Cottolene" made from cotton seed, etc. etc. when you can buy elenty of the finest kind of lard at eight cents per pound. FRANK CRAMER. 47.

—John McGary left on our table a sample of very fine apples raised on his farm. He had several bushels this year. Notwithstanding the numerous late frosts.

—We understand the round elevator took in the largest amount of wheat one day this week of any day in its existance. Who says Delano is not a wheat market?

—Several very fine pieces of sorghum are to be found in this vicinity, and soon, with no preventing frosts, people will have a supply of good, healthy, syrup of their own raising.

--Charley Conzet and family drove to Minneapolis and looked over the city several days lately. He says things looks nice but he thinks Delano has more of a business boom according to size.

—The Presbyterian church is now a settled fact. The foundation is being built and the superstructure is to be completed as soon as possible, the building is to be 30x30, and will lack but ten feet of floor room of being as large as its predecessor.

—An event of double interest took place yesterday at the residence of Judge and Mrs. Daniel Fish, 2301 Third Avanue South- The occasion was the marriage of their oldest daughter, Miss Annie Louise Fish, to Rev. Charles Graves of Iowa, and the celebration of their own marriage twenty-two years before.--Minnerpolis items, Pioneer Press.

--There is nothing like being ready for emergencies. There should be a meeting called at once, and committees appointed to assist in entertaining the asylum commission and showing them our site, and the surrounding country whenever they may choose to come. They may take a notion to come almost anytime; it is best to be prepared. Further attention is demanded in other directions, also.

—The poem "My Mother" by Rev. A. F. Wilson, at the head of our first page will be of interest to many of our readers as the author was well known in Delano and other parts of the county as the oldest son of W. H. Wilson, who moved to Washington, a few years ago where A. F. entered the calling of his father, and after a short service in the ministery, died. His father and mother are having some of his poems published and have sent us proof sheets of several, of which we publish one this week.

—School Treasure Borsch informs us that yesterday, while in the city, he paid that old $2,800 bond and interest on same amounting to $196. This is good news for our school. He says strenous efforts will be made to meet other bonds as fast as they come due. If the letter of the law is complied with as it should and likely will be from now on, and the sinking fund used for the purpose for which it is raised there ought to be no difficulty in paying the bonds when due. It looks now as if our school affairs would move along in much better shape than for years past.

—The committee on Insane Hospital appointed at a meeting in Delano lately, was represented in St. Paul before the commission appointed to locate the asylum, by I. Gutzwiller Jr., Dr. Shrader, J. E. Borsch, and F. H. Lindsley. Although the delegation exceeded, somewhat, the authority given them by making the offer of our splendid site at the sum of $15,000, which will necessitate the raising of a bonus, the people, generally, will no doubt feel that it is better to do that if necessary than to loose the chance of securing the building of the asylum at this place. Our offer has been placed on file, and the commission has promised to visit us, and look over our site and take it into consideration.

—On Tuesday evening, Franz Dusa was arrested for being drunk and disorderly. He ran his horse through the streets to the imminent risk of killing somebody. Finally he undertook to keep time with the hand organ at the merry-go-round and was placed in the cooler. On Wednesday it was found that he had broken up the stove and torn up a matress in the jail. On being brought before His Honor Justice Walter, he claimed that he wanted no lawyer, waved his right to a jury and through interpreter Pograba, that after taking two drinks of whiskey at Mat Fautche's saloon; he remembered nothing that he had done. The Court imposed a sentence of $15. and costs or 30 days in jail. Mr. Dusa said he had paid out all the money he had and would pay no more. He was remanded to jail.

—C. M. Conzet has a large stock of a new kind of collars.

—Envelopes with return blank printed on, at GAZETTE office.

—Blank Notes and Receipts for sale at the GAZETTE office, cheap.

—The Delano Crickets have gone to Watertown to play the boys under 15 years old.

—Lead pencils, black, blue and read, and drawing pencils at the GAZETTE office next door East of the Post Office

--Dr. Walter has had several cases of "barb wire" among the neighboring horses. Dry, short pasturage makes animals restless and barb wire is pretty sure to leave its marks whenever opportunity presents.

--John Coolen has had the interior of his hardware store remodeled, moved the office to the front of the room, got in a new stock of goods and is in for his share of the business. Tell him you read this in the GAZETTE.

—It is a very good move of the village authorities to arrest disturbers of the peace and dignity of the village, who have imbibed too freely of intoxicants and it is to be hoped that now the ice has been broken there will be no more of horse running, and other disturbances on the streets.

County Cullings.

We understand that J. H. Hoover has sold his Howard Lake property and intends to move to Minneapolis, soon.

Horses and cattle are growing restless, and where pasturage is short and flies bad they will get out occasionally.

Matt Czeck and his daughter met with a serious accident last Friday asternoon as the east bound passanger train passed through their farm a mile west of Waverly, they were going after hay the team and the cars collied at a private crossing Mr. Czech was knocked unconscious, at the last reports was not recovering, the girl was bruised some, the wagon demolished and one horse injured so that he died. Too much caution cannot be used in crossing railroad tracks.

Howard Lake, on Tuesday, voted to bond the town for water works. Unless things are managed about right enongh of the voters will be made to believe the easiest way to pay these bonds is by voting saloon license and Howard will tumble from the top of the list of villages with big valuations of property down among other whiskey towns. The best thing for the town is to keep the pace they have set, and raise up a generation who can exist without guzzling intoxicating liquors.

From the Waverly Tribune we learn that the teachers assembled at Buffalo passed a set of resolutions.

1st. They go in for individual as well as general improvement.

2nd. They don't propose to apply where there is no vacancy; nor to underbid others.

3rd. The usual thanks were extended to various persons and bodies; and a resolution passed "That copies of these resolutions be handed for publications to the editors of the county papers." As we are not acquainted with any of the committee, and did not receive a copy of the resolutions for publication, we presume the committee took the same view of it that the man did who refused to extend his hand to a drowning man because he had not been introduced to him.

Reasons Why Delano Should Have the Fourth Hospital for Insane

A few of the many good reasons why Delano should have the Fourth Insane Hospital are:

1st. It is one of the healthiest localities in the state.

2nd. The site offered is one of the finest for a hospital, on the cottage plan, that can be found.

3rd. Good water is easily obtainable.

4th. The drainage is unsurpassed.

5th. It is but an hours ride on the railroad to Minneapolis and is located on the G. N. and but three miles from the Soo line, neither of which roads have an institution of the kind.

6th. Wright county, among the largest and the best in the state has never been recognized in the distribution of state institutions, and deserves its share.

7th. The land offered is good farming land, with plenty of timber, meadow and tillable land, just such a place as would make a fine home for sane people to live on, and such as the state should supply to those who will be obliged to spend their days in an insane asylum. The undulations of the land furnish many fine building spots, and no place could be nicer for the erection of a number of cottages for the use of those whom the state has kindly taken under its charge.

A PASTORALE.

"An humble boy with a shining pail,
Went gaily singing down the vale,
To where a cow with a brindle tail,
On the alfalfa did regale.

"A bumblebee did gaily sail
Over the soft and shady vale,
Where the boy with the shining pail,
Milked the cow with a brindle tail.

"The bee lit down on the cow's left ear,
Her heels flew up through the atmosphere.
And through the leaves of a cottonwood tree,
The boy soared into eternity."

HE CAN STILL THE TEMPEST.

Written on board steamer near Anacortes, Washington.

Moaning ocean, why weep, and thrash and rave?
Is it because some lonely seaman, has found in thee a watery grave?
If thou could'st but speak thy story, of the ones in thee who rest,
They would be from every nation, from north and south, east and west.
Some have left the native harbor with their faces all aglow,
Some have come from far off countries, some from countries nearer home,
Looking for the hidden treasure, treasure to enrich the mind,
Looking for the filthy lucre, trusting in its power to mend
These have met the storm and tempest
Out upon the raging main,
Far away from home or harbor
Never to return again.
Sparkling ocean, dance and hiss and howl and moan,
You are in subordination to him who sits upon the throne,
At his word thy angry murmer would be stilled and hushed to rest
And the tired lonly seaman float secure upon thy breast.
For His hand has shaped the mountain,
River, lake and sparkling brook,
And the gentle grace of nature
Is but a token of His look.
Holy, holy, God of nature, thine the strength and power to be,
God the Father, God the Saviour, God the Holy Ghost in three,
Speak the words and still the tempest
Of the angry roaming sea, angry sea.
A. F. Wilson.

WHAT has generally been termed the worst element in the Republican party is apparently coming to the front. Men who have been relegated to the rear, as not proper leaders are now being brought out or are bringing themselves out, as candidates for high places. Of course they will have to be turned down again or the country given over to bad officers.

WHILE it may be considered very generous of our neighbor on the Minnesota river Chaska to offer a site for the Fourth Hospital for Insane for the small consideration of $1 it ought not, nor do we believe it will be, considered as making up for any disqualification of the site offered, as the commission, and most other people who give the matter a thought, well know the appropriation is sufficiently small with which to purchase from 640 to 1000 acres of land in any section of the country where farming, dairying or other agricultural pursuits are carried on. The state expects to pay $15,000 for a suitable place; and a suitable place should be obtained. It is not the object of the Commission to receive donations for the state, but to find a suitable place, a place where several hundred unfortunate individuals are to spend their lives, and a few dollars difference in the purchase price when land is being obtained for its cash value, and below, is not to be considered for a moment, as against a home; a piece of land on which hundreds of people, of all clases are to live out the remainder of their days, at the expense of the state.

SOME politicians claim that in selecting commissions to look up sites for public buildings attention is paid to securing men pledged to some particular location, consequently there is no need of taking any trouble to show our site for the Fourth Hospital for Insane to the Commission when it comes around on its tour of inspection of locations. In the case of the present Commission which is to visit Delano soon after Oct. 15, it was appointed by Gov. Clough, under a law passed by the last Legislature, requiring: "That a commission be appointed by the governor, of seven persons, who shall be residents of the State of Minnesota, no two of whom shall be residents of the same congressional district, and each of the three leading political parties shall be represented in said commission, who shall locate and purchase a site for the Fourth State Hospital for the Insane at some point as near as may be practicable to the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, which in their judgment is most available and suitable."

To ordinary citizens it would look like rather a hard thing to charge Governor Clough with picking out a committee whose minds are already made up as to where they would locate so important an institution as a hospital for insane, and then sending them out on a junketing tour, at the expence of the state, under pretense of selecting a site.

It would, also, look like a pretty severe criticism to cast upon a commission of seven men representing each congressional district, and the three leading political parties in the state and of the prominence of the commission under consideration to charge them with loaning themselves out as tools to others, for political purposes, while pretending in the intrests of poor suffering humanity to select the very best available homes for hundreds and thousands of people to spend the balance of their days on.

We don't beleive that Governor Clough or the commission care to build so great a monument to there lack of honesty and sincerity in the discharge of so gave a duty to be handed down to postenty for years to come. But we prefer to believe them inocent until proven otherwise, and our people should not loose heart in doing what they can to furnish the best site, the most available location, and trust to the commission to place the buildings where they will be the greatest comfort to those who will occupy them.

Read the Law.

It would be well for some of our village authorities to read the statutes of Minnesota carefully over, before they get into trouble concerning the liquor business, as the penalties for most offenses connected with the sale of intoxicants are severe The applicant is obliged to, or according to law is obliged to give a bond, with two or more sureties, who shall be free holders of the county and who who shall justify in twice the amount of said bond, to be approved by the said board of county commiosioners or by the common council or other governing body of any town village or burrough, or the common council of any city to which such application is made, in the penal sum of two thousand dollars, conditioned that the said person so licensed will not sell or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquors at any place other than the room named in such license, nor on the Sabbath nor on any general or special election day, and that he will keep a quiet and orderly house, and not permit gambling with cards or with any other means or device for money or its representative, or other thing of value, in the house or place of business of such person, and will not sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish or dispose of such liquors to any minor person, or to any pupil or student in any public school, academy, seminary or other institution of learning, nor to any intemperate person, nor habitual drunkard. No person shall be accepted as sureties on any such bond who are already on any other bond given pursuant to the provisions of this section."

If bondsmen pledge themselves that their friend for whom they sign will not break the law in any of the above particulars, it looks as if instead of going in to assist in fracturing the rules they would, from common decency, if for no other reason, refrain from making a business of patronizing on Sunday, the bar for which they have, as sureties, made a bargain with themselves as members of the council. Men who wil commit such an offense are unfit to hold an office in the gift of the people, and if the law is lived up to they will some day probably find themselves out of office.

The law which we quote below is quite pointed on this matter:

Official Misconduct.—Penalty.

If any county commissioner or member of the council or other governing body of any city, villiage, or other municipal corporation in this state, any mayor of any city, any judge, sheriff, justice of the peace constable or other officer, willfully neglects or refuses to perform any duty required of him by the laws regulating the liquor traffic or the issue of licenses therefore, he shall be deemed guilty of a malfeasance in office, and shall thereafter be disqualified from holding the same for and during the remainder of the term for which he was elected or appointed, and should be liable on his bond in an amount not more than five hundred dollars, nor less than one hundred dollars, recoverable in any court having jurisdiction.

Newspaper Reading.

In this age of Newspapers, when so many papers are published; when almost every village has a local paper of its own; giving the news of the neighborhood, the county, state and more or less of what is transpiring throughout the world, there is, of course, a large number of readers; it is very seldom one meets an individual who can not read, and most of them are tolerably well posted in the news of the day. Yet it is surprising to find what a large number of people depend on their neighbors for their news, borrow papers, or simply listen to what those who have read may say. The Annandale Post mentions the case of a Superintendent of schools in a neighboring county who asked every teacher in the institute who took the local paper to hold up their hand, and out of about one hundred, six responded. While at the last term of court in our own county we were much surprised to hear so many men called for jury duty or witnesses testify when asked the question as to what papers if any they had read, answer, none. There are men in our county, as there is in many other counties who call themselves business men and don't take their local paper. Some aspire to political positions; or actually occupy places to which they have been elected by the people, and whose interests they are supposed to serve, who take no papers at all unless they uphold their views exactly; they seem to care nothing for what other people want, not even enough to take a paper of a differant political faith from their own. A man for instance, who sits in the legislature of his district ought certainly to read, without borrowing his neighbors, one local paper of each of the two leading parties, if there is a chance to do so, and to know as well as is possible what views people in his district entertain concerning questions of local, or of state importance; and not attempt to go it blind. It is better to hear all sides, and form an opinion that is correct, than to go prejudiced into law making, unwilling to hear arguments and resolved to buck through what the party whippers demand, regardless of consequences. Let every family take some local paper, and if possible more.

Letter From Chicago.

CHICAGO, Aug. 25th., 1895

DEAR JOHN:—The first week I didn't go out much, and that is the reason I didn't write sooner. The first place I went was down to the big stores, they say that Siegel Cooper has the largest store in the world. The next place I went was out to Washington park, which is noted for flowers, the most beautiful I ever saw. They have flowers from all over the world. I saw the race tracks. From there we went to a home for the aged Jews, the oldest man was 94 and the oldest woman was 83. Then I went to Milwaukee on the boat Virginia, the day that we went there was over 1000 people on it, it is a little over half a block long, we started from here 9 A. M. and arrived at Milwaukee 2 P. M. we started back at 5 P. M. and landed here at half past 10. The Virginia is the largest and safest on the lake. Milwaukee is a nice city it is about as large as Minneapolis, there was a big fire the day I was there.

Where the World's Fair was it is torn down and burned, there is only one or two buildings standing. The building that they called the art gallery during the World's Fair has got Fields museum in, it is as nice as the World's Fair. The first thing I saw at Fields museum was a skeleton of a whale and an elephant, there was all kinds of stuffed birds and all the kinds of birds eggs and some nests, there was some California red wood cut when it was 898 years old, skins of all kinds of snakes, animals, and birds, all the stuffed animals, all kinds of things found in the bottom of the sea, there was some more skeletons of fish and animals, there was one of a giant squad and a devil fish, there was feathers of all kinds of birds. I saw the coins of the United States from a hundred years back, and the coins of foreign countries, there was a shield made out of gold and silver used by the ancient Romans. There was two sleds used by the Esquimaux and five or six canoes, and some dolls and their clothes. There was some boats that the Indians used. There was some saddles made by the Indians. There was a lot of bows and arrows. I saw 7 or 8 mummies but I can't tell you about them because we are going away today and we are getting ready now. There was a tent used by the Indians and there was all the kind of ways they travelled in olden times. I could tell you again as much but I have not got time. WILLIE MOWATT.

Total Abstinence and Prohibition.

We, as white-ribboners, know that alcohol acts upon the nerves as the soft pedal acts upon the wires of the piano; it deadens them so that they think cold is not cold, heat is not heat, trouble is not trouble. But this deadening effect is a delusion during which the law of periodicity binds men with its pitiless chain: one day they have the drink, the gambling, the tobacco habit; the next day it has them. The only place in the world in which a man under sentence of death can secure a substitute, for money, is China; and the man agreeing to act as that substitute distributes the money he is to receive among his relatives, calls for his opium pipe, and goes his way out of the world. The power of narcotics over the human brain has in this fact its strongest and its most deplorable illustration.

The man who says, "I can carry more liquor than any other drinker in town, and yet keep a level head," gives by that claim an inventory of goods already badly damaged. For since alcohol is preeminently a brain poison, men of most brain grow dizzy first, and Hottentots stand steady longest, while genius shrivels under drink like a snow wreath in the sun. As civilization becomes complex the brain acquires more convolutions to the square inch, and its delicate tissues are torn more ruthlessly by the coarse intruder, alcohol. By parity of reasoning, the more complex the civilization developed, the more vital will it be that those who handle its fine mechanism shall have all their keenly trained powers keyed up to concert pitch. The brain must think with lightning speed, the hand must be steadfast as steel, the pulse must beat strong yet true, if a great commercial nation is to hold its own with the forces of chemistry and invention now on the field.

Temperance workers can hardly overestimate the value to the total abstinence cause of the multiplying modern inventions that put such a splendid premium upon teetotalism. The sure, slow lift of civilization's tidal wave is with us. Even as the farmer's crops grow most while he is sleeping, so ten thousand forces are perpetually at work in this great laboratory of the world, to move forward the white car of temperance reform. We who give our whole lives to the movement are hardly more than the weather-vane that shows which way the wind is blowing.

All the work that we do is based on a prohibitory law for one, enacted by himself, and the prohibition of the legalized sale of intoxicating liquors as beverages, enacted by the town, county, state or nation. Whatever tends directly to this result, whether it be restricted hours of sale, Sunday closing, prohibition of the sale to minors and drunkards, we, as white ribbon women, strongly favor and do our utmost to enforce in law and to enforce in fact. But whatever tends to add respectability and permanence to the liquor system, we oppose, viz., license and high license in all their fluctuating forms and under the various disguises that they so readily assume. We believe that "what the law says is property is property," and that alcoholic liquors give no equivalent for value received, but are only a form of investment, the most delusive in the world, producing no wealth and destroying the wealth-producing power of the drinker in exact proportion to the amount he drinks. Therefore, when the state says that alcoholic drinks are property and shall be protected the first great fallacy in government has been enacted.

But the pocketbook nerve is the only one that vibrates throughout the liquor system, except when it allies itself with the ambitions of men by entering the political arena. To dissect out the pocketbook and political nerves is the Herculean task to which white ribbon women have set their hands. Whenever in any country the government allies itself with the effort to secure Prohibition we cooperate with "the powers that be" to the utmost of our own power. We cannot consent as an organization, to stand in relations of equal friendlines toward one political party that ignores, another that opposes, and a third that espouses the cause of Prohibition.—Union Signal.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The late showers of rain have helped out some in many respects, but we are in need of much more rain in order to help the p o ing and increase the feed in the pastures.

Farmers are plowing and cutting corn, some of the corn is ripening rather premature or rather drying up, but still there will be a fair corn crop and it is thought farmers will have plenty of feed for the coming winter.

Mrs. E. W. Mills spent two days in Minneapolis this week. Henry Fogleman has also spent part of the week in the city.

School will begin, at Armstrong Dist. 81, next Monday. Mrs. E. W. Mills, teacher.

The social held with Mrs. Dr. Wright on last Tuesday evening was fairly attended and proved quite a success financially.

We are now having our season of water melons, pumpkin pies, and fried chicken, these are sweet to the taste but sometimes bitter in the belly.

Last Tuesday morning the Independence and Greenwood Historical society made an excursion trip to the city of Minneapolis over the G. N. and Soo lines: it was made up of some of the head organs of the agricultural industry of both towns, the trip being made partly for business and partly for pleasure, for a while we were the guests of Stephen B. Howard, ex-State Senator, and a very prominent lawyer in the city of Minneapolis, and should Mr. Howard ever come up again for political honors he can count on a good round vote from the town of Independence, we never go back on any thing that is solid.

Next we were the guests of Mr. Bond, a Justice of the Peace, who presides over one of the Jewish Sanhedrims of Minneapolis, we being there in the interest of W. J. Peterson who was brought there by the Minneapolis Munsel Printing Co. for trial, to recover $18 as they allege for a history of Minneapolis and Hennepin county in two volumns, Mr. Peterson denying that he ever contracted for said books. The case being called, our attorney asked for a Jury trial, this did not seem to strike the attorney on the other side very favorably, and he asked for a stay of proceedings, to this our Attorndy (Mr. Howard) would not agree and finally after a little preliminary maneuvering the complainant withdrew the suit, and so stands the case of the Minnneapolis Munsel Printing company against W. J. Peterson, of Maple. After this a majority of the excursionists banqueted at one of the prominent hotels in the city, on pumpkin pie, fried chicken and seasoned up with book agents, now we have given those fellows only a foretaste of what will follow if they ever make another attempt of this kind, and they may find out that there is more above our shirt collar than they anticipated. Men of independence and Greenwood know whether they signed for any books or not, are we fools and imbeciles and willing tools of book agents? There are many kinds of bugs, the gold bug, the potato bug and the humbug, the last named being the oldest and biggest of them all, having originated way back in the garden of Eden when the devil told Adam that big lie and got him to eat of the appel, and it seems strange but true the devil has been probagating his specie ever since, and yet his posterity has greatly degenerated for in the worlds early history it is said the inhabitants of Pandemonium had tails as an accompaniment, but in these latter days they are not even blessed with this useful and ornimental appendage, but instead they have a Judas appearance with a hang dog look and a ghostly smile, In these latter times amid the Darwin age it is hard for some men to trace their ancestry or genealogy only through the monkey or jackass specie, and sometimes we think it may have been a misfortune for them that their ancestry was preserved during the dark ages. The people in the rear end of Hennepin county have toiled hard the last forty years for a little of this worlds goods and they do not propose to stick it in the vest pocket of a swagering specimen of humanity, for what they do not want and never agreed to buy.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
Square Type.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied in the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. A BOSTON editor took a Maine farm, abandoned, and determined to show that the abandonment was a piece of folly. Among other crops he has cut this year was 100 tons of hay from this piece of land. It takes an editor to point the way every time.

IN the face of the absolutely stupendous number of pictures which represent Queen Victoria on any and every domestic occasion with her crown on, it is rather curious to learn that she has not, as a matter of fact, worn it more than twenty times during her whole reign.

THE Indian is a costly luxury. Up to date we have spent over a billion dollars to fill him, to drill him and to kill him. There are 247,000 red men left in this country, of whom about two-thirds are self-supporting. Of the number 35,000 live outside of the reservations, and are counted as tax paying population.

AT the present time the Bank of France has in its coffers not only the largest stock of gold and silver in the world, but also an amount that has never been paralelled in the history of finance. The figures are colossal, and stated, as they are, in francs, they are beyond the grasp of the average mind. The total is $660,000,000, of which $410,000,000 is in gold.

IF the new Maxim gun for infantry will discharge 500 shells a minute, as is claimed, and if a fair proportion of these shots are fired with fatal effect, battles of the future will necessarily be of short duration. At this rate it would take but a few minutes to annihilate a large army. A few more such inventions as this and universal peace may follow.

CALIFORNIA has a provision in her jury law which provides two extra jurymen above the regular panel in criminal cases, who shall hear all the evidence and argument, but who shall not join in the verdict unless one or two of the regular jury should fall ill during the progress of the trial. This is to obviate the necessity of going over the whole trial in the event of the incapacity of one of the twelve to finish the trial.

FARMER JOHN HEDDEN, of Verona, N. J., believes the days of miracles are not past. Recently he mowed a large quantity of hay, and the next day he took several teams to draw the hay home, expecting to find it in an unfit condition for hauling without throwing and drying, as a heavy rain passed over the section the night before. Mr. Hedden was surprised to find that not a drop of rain had fallen upon his meadow, while to the west, south and east of his land the ground was saturated.

A YOUNG man named Bennett has put his bicycle to profitable use in the Australian gold fields by establishing with it a postal route between Coolgardie, the center of the mining district, and Dundos, which is 280 miles away. A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Herald writes that seventy-three locomotives have been sold to Japan by a firm in the United States, and that the American locomotives have proved their superiority in Japan over those of other countries. When troops and war materials were being rushed to the sea the American locomotives took the steep grades over the mountains better than those from other lands. They get along over light bridges, heavy grades and uneven tracks in South America and Australia where English locomotives could not have gone with safety and efficiency.

TESLA is reported to be laboring on the idea that it is possible to produce in our atmosphere vibrations similar to those which cause the sunlight, and thus obtain an artificial light as intense as that which comes from the sun, but with no danger of obstruction from the clouds. He says that sulight is produced by 500 millions of millions of vibrations per second in our atmosphere, and in order to produce the same kind of light it will be necessary to induce by machinery an equal number of vibrations. He says he has succeeded up to a certain point, and is still at work on the task.

MANY of our exchanges are noting the fact that pie is gradually being excluded from the bills of fare of many of the hotels and clubs, and the pie-eating community is growing less every year. Perhaps it is well considering the kind of pie furnished by hotels and restaurants, but the old-fashioned pie made by our mothers and grandmothers was an inspiration, a joy, a delight, and if we had such pie now there would be more instead of fewer pie eaters. Pie cannot be made by machinery, like crackers. Pie making is a science. Do not condemn pie, but the method of making it.

MOB LAW.

Judge Lynch Executes Sentence Upon Four Murderers.

Yreka, Cal., the Scene of the Manifold Crime—Local Police Fooled Into Non-Resistance—Victims Meet Death Side by Side.

YREKA, Cal., Aug. 28. — About 1 o'clock Monday morning a crowd of 200 men gathered here to lynch the four murderers in the county jail. So quietly were their preparations made that the sheriff had no intimation of their coming. Small groups from all over Siskiyou county began to arrive on the outskirts of the town about 9 o'clock Sunday night. At 1 o'clock, the crowd having gathered, they secured an old rail at the depot and carried it to the courthouse square, placing it between two trees.

The Police Fooled by a Ruse.

The local police were called away by a sham fight. By the time they returned they realized the intention of the crowd. The chief of police went to the engine house to ring the fire alarm bell, but found that the ropes had been cut. He then went to the jail, but the mob had already arrived and in such numbers that the police were powerless. A number of men, all masked, awakened Under Sheriff Radford at the sheriff's office in the courthouse and demanded the keys of the jail from him. He positively refused to open the door or give up the keys. Finding that Radford was immovable the mob went across to the jail and got on top of the stone wall which surrounds it. Deputy Sheriff Brautlacht, who sleeps in the jail, fired two shots to alarm the city marshal, thinking some of the prisoners were trying to escape. He then opened the doors and was immediately seized by the mob, who entered the jail. Having no keys to the cells they were compelled to smash the locks with sledgehammers.

First Victim of Mob.

Lawrence H. Johnson, who stabbed his wife to death on July 28, was first to receive the attention of the mob. They broke the lock from the door of his cell and, placing a rope around his neck, led him out of the jail and across the street to where the iron rail was laid between the forks of two trees. Johnson pleaded for mercy, but the silent gathering gave no heed to his appeals. He was quickly strung up, and died from strangulation.

Three Other Murderers Lynched.

The mob returned to the jail and broke into the cell of William Null, who shot William Hayton at Callahan's on April 21. Null asked to make a statement, but the mob refused to listen, and he was soon hanging beside Johnson. Louis Moreno, who killed George Sears on the 5th inst., was next taken out and hanged. The last and youngest of the four was Garland Semler, aged 19, who killed Caspar Meierhaus at Bailey Hill on the 5th inst. A rope was placed around his neck and in a few minutes he was swinging beside his companions. About this time Sheriff Hobbs arrived on the scene, but was met by several of the mob who notified him that "the job was finished." By this time the greater part of the mob had dispersed, leaving only a few on guard. Soon these departed also, and the square was soon deserted.

BRADSTREET'S REPORT.

Business Shows Less Activity in All Parts of the Country.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26. — Bradstreet's weekly review of trade says:

"The volume of general trade throughout the east, south, southwest and on the Pacific coast is no larger in volume. In fact, at several southern and eastern centers rather more of quiet is reported than a week ago. At western and central western points, with some exceptions, signs are conspicuous of the favorable influence on business of the prospectively enormous Indian corn crop, and the very large harvest of spring wheat. At the east stimulating influences are found in continued activity in leading industrial lines, notably iron and steel, the recent marked advances in prices of which metals at eastern centers is being echoed from Chicago and St. Louis.

"Mercantile collections at most western centers remain slow, but many jobbers at Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul and Minneapolis have been rushed to keep up with orders, which have not in all instances been confined to necessities.

"On the Pacific coast business is not particularly active. The Oregon as well as the California wheat crop is short. Portland will have an industrial exposition in October. Rains in Washington have saved much valuable timber from fire. The clipper service from San Francisco to New York has been resumed."

All Free But Debs.

CHICAGO, Aug. 24.—According to the testimony of the American Railway union officials, who were on Thursday liberated from the Woodstock jail, their imprisonment not only furnished them with a much needed rest, but has been the means of inspiring the union with new life. The six directors who were imprisoned with President Debs at Woodstock were liberated Thursday morning, having served their three months' sentences. George W. Howard, who, at his own request, was sent to Will county jail at Joliet, was liberated Friday morning. Debs has yet three months to serve.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—The official reports of the captains of the Seaford and the Lyon concur that the accident was unavoidable and was due to the fog.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Too Much Kite.

A peculiar accident, which came near ending the earthly career of Charles Barker, occurred at Winona during a kite flying contest. Mr. Barber, who inaugurated the contest, appeared with a kite measuring eight feet from top to bottom, and with the assistance of a couple of friends he proceeded to fly it. After the kite was well in the air, Barber fastened the rope by which it was held around his body in order to hold it better. No sooner had he done this than the friends who were aiding him let go the cord, thinking that Barber could hold it all right. As they let go Barber was dragged along the ground for some rods, and then lifted bodily into the air. His friends tried to rescue him, but they could not reach him, and he was afraid to drop, even if he could have done so. The kite pulled him up into the air over 15 feet and then the wind seemed to die away. Barber and the kite began to sink slowly and gracefully, and in a few minutes he was dropped into the river, which is wide. Tied as he was to the kite, Barber could not sink, and in a short time he was rescued by a man with a boat, who brought him to shore after cutting the rope which held the kite. The kite fell in marsh land on the Wisconsin side of the river. Mr. Barber is none the worse for his trip in the air.

Robbed the Church.

When the priest at the Catholic church of New Ulm went to the vault to get the chalice to use at mass, to his surprise he found that the vault had been blown open, and from its contents are missing a gold chalice, plate and soporia, and a silver monstrance, the total value of which is about $200. There is no clue to the burglars, nor is it known when the deed was done, as the vault had not been used for several days. The vault was situated in the basement at the rear of the church and its existence was known to a very few people. It was therefore plain that the robbery had been done by some one who was familiar with the church.

Valuable Tobacco.

James Miller, a forger, who secured about $200 last winter from St. Cloud merchants by passing spurious checks, and was sent to the reformatory, succeeded in hiding from the officers $76 of the money he secured last December until a few days ago. It has been suspected right along that Miller had part of the money in his possession and he has been searched several times. At the last meeting of the board of managers the use of tobacco by the inmates was forbidden. Last week a plug of tobacco was found on Miller's person. Upon examination it was found to contain $76 in bills.

Horrible Death.

Magnus Ryberg, who was one of the machinists at the Phoenix mill, Minneapolis, was strangled to death while adjusting some machinery. His body was found a few moments after the accident occurred, but life was extinct.

Ryberg had entered head first a tubular dust collector, in which there was an air pump. In the bottom of the air pump there is an aperture. Through this Ryberg stuck his head, and just then he was caught by one of the two dust carriers which revolve within the pump. The carrier caught him beneath the chin in a vice-like grip, and it was but a few of seconds until he was dead.

News in Brief.

The Winona Lumber Company's yard at Owatonna was destroyed by fire, as well as George Holden's tub factory. The lumber company's loss is $15,000, partly insured. The loss on the tub factory is $2,500, with $1,600 insurance.

In explanation of the decrease in the population of Anoka, the area of the city has been decreased since the '90 census. The old limits used to extend east to the Candy place, a full half mile further than they do now. The western and northern limits were also drawn in. This caused a loss of 612 persons, which leaves a net increase in the city of 172. In proof of this, Anoka county will show a net increase of over 25 per cent.

The magnificent silver service, purchased for her namesake, Uncle Sam's swiftest warship, by the city of Minneapolis, will be presented in Boston harbor Aug. 31. It had originally been intended that the presentation should be made at Portland, Me., where the North Atlantic squadron is to rendezvous, but the escort of the Minneapolis Knights who go to Boston to attend the triennial conclave of the Knights Templar was desired, and so the time was changed.

Fred Rice, a prominent young man, committed suicide at his father's home in the town of Isanti, six miles south of Cambridge. He cut his throat with a scythe. When found life was extinct. No cause can be assigned for the deed by his parents.

The postoffice at Emerald, Faribault county, Minn., has been discontinued. Mail will go to Dell. Axel Homberg was commissioned postmaster at Kinbaae, Minn.

Samples of rope are being made at the prison factory, and the state will soon manufacture rope for commercial purposes, thus establishing another industry at the prison.

During Mrs. H. F. Brown's visit to Mankato final arrangements were made for the shipment of the state exhibit of woman's work which has been prepared for the cotten states' exhibition to be opened next month at Atlanta. The state committee consists of Mrs. H. F. Brown, Mrs. L. P. Hunt and Mrs. F. G. Barrows.

Godfrey Rignell was held up and robbed in the office of his brother in Minneapolis.

Cottonwood county's personal assessment is $578,684, of which $157,947 is in the village. Real estate assessment is $2,895, 726.

KEEPING YOUNG.

Women May Retain Their Youthfulness If They Will.

The desirableness of keeping young rarely crosses the mind of those who are now young. They see others about them who have lost their bloom, embroidered their first wrinkles, snowed themselves under with white hair; but they have always been surrounded with people older than themselves; it is a part of life, a feature of the world, for these others to be old; but for their part, they have always been young. And in some unexpressed way, probably the natural feeling of the immortal being, they always expect to be young. Whether their expectation is realized depends almost altogether upon themselves. They think no more about it, however, till the first gray hair comes like an admonishing ghost upon the scene. At seventeen they were of the opinion that the first thing in the world was beauty. But at thirty-five they find it is better to be young than to be beautiful. And it very often happens that the girl who was quite beautiful, with vivid color and sparkling eyes and fruity flesh and dimples, when not quite twenty, finds herself at forty with none of these, and neither young nor beautiful. Yet if she were really fine and fair at twenty, then at forty she has a right to be fine and fair still; she should hardly have gone off at all. It matters far less than you can make her now believe that her eyes may be sunken a little, that the line from the nostril to the corner of the lip may have become marked, that the color may be less persistent, that the dimple may show symptoms of becoming something deeper; under certain conditions all that is hardly noticeable. If she has kept the spring that used to animate every motion, so that she moves now with as light a step, as erect a bearing, with as quick a grace, holds her head still like a flower atop of its stem, straight and strong, yet without the least affectation of juvenile frolicking ways, she will give only the suggestion of youth whenever she stirs. If she goes slow and lagging, with a stoop and signs of weariness, she will have an arm offered her, and it will be understood that she bears a weight of years and needs it. If she dresses still in the tints and stuffs that suit her best, not with youthful frivolities, but with no sign of surrender to age, she will have the effect of still belonging to the forces whose uniform she wears. But if she wears sad and dull colors, relinquishing with reluctance last year's styles, and with but little regard to styles anyway, she will be taken at her own valuation. More still, and of more value than the other considerations, if she still interests herself in the things that interest youth, has saved herself from the criticizing and condemnatory manner which years sometimes give to one's view of life, so that the young still find her companionable, she not only affects others as being young, but feels at fifty scarcely a day older than ever. If, meanwhile, she has taken also to heart a practice of seeing only the brighter side of things, of forgetting herself and remembering others, of looking into the next life as into a further stage of the delights of this, she has filled her life and her soul with pity and compassion and tenderness, with love of God and of her fellow-beings—age, even when it brings white hair, and withered throat, and dropping cheek, will seem not to have any trail of eld, but rather to be a different and beautiful youth. Harper's Bazar.

LITTLE DAMES AND MEN.

We all must remember when
We were little dames and men:
When each sorrow tugged away with all its might
At our little hearts and eyes,
Till the air was full of sighs,
And the brightest day was turned to darkest night.

How we'd weep,
How we'd creep
To our little beds to sleep,
With wet lashes on flushed faces: even then,
Not a soul would ever know
Half our agony; and so
We should sympathize with little dames and men.

We must all remember when
We were little dames and men,
When we meet the little ones from day to day;
A kind word is just as cheap,
And it sinks to depths as deep
As the harsh one you were sending down their way.

If you knew
How a few
Gracious acts and words from you
Were planted in their souls: to blossom when Golden days of childhood seem
To be shadows of a dream,
You would love and cherish little dames and men.

M'GHEOGHAN'S LAPSE.

BY WILLIS CHAMBERLAIN.

M'GHEOGHAN had kept sober a long time. For weeks he had not even taken a glass of whisky with Jimmy Sullivan, and he used to drop into Jimmy's every evening, "just to wash the dust from his throat," as he phrased it. The washing process had developed into such proportions that McGheoghan's wife said he might as well "dhrown himself and be done wid it." Then she applied what she called the "wather cure," and McGheoghan had such faith in the reformation that she had taken the baby and gone for three days to her cousins, the O'Flannigans, in Saucelito; and the only admonition she had given her husband was the parting injunction: "Mind yer eye, now, Maurice."

McGheoghan had not been particularly proud of his descent from the McGheoghans, of Galway, but his young wife continually dinned it into him that they were "a fine ould family," and that he ought not to disgrace them by associating with people beneath him. It was bad enough to be poor, she said, without mixing with the common herd. As a distinguishing mark, she always gave an Italian pronunciation to her husband's name, Maurice, and insisted upon his doing the same. Mrs. McGheoghan had learned Italian in her youth among the fishermen of North Beach. Maurice did not take his wife's discipline kindly, and it was only his love for her that made him endure it. Out of her sight he liked to be one of the boys, and in sly ridicule of her aristocratic pretensions spoke of himself as a "humin illevator"—he elevated bricks by the hodful up a ladder.

When McGheoghan pushed quietly through the screen doors, slipped unobtrusively past the crowd at the bar, sat down at the last table, and began looking at the prints in the Irish News, Jimmy Sullivan knew something was in the wind; for had not the O'Rourkes told his wife that Mrs. McGheoghan had forbidden her husband to have anything to do with that "low-down shaloon-keeper, Jimmy Sullivan?"

"What'll yez have, me bye?" called Jimmy, as the last man drew one of the three towels hanging before the bar across his dripping mustache and swung himself out into the street. "Faith, but it's a long time since I've had the good luck to grip yer fist, man. Here's the crame o' the sason till ye."

If the thought of his wife came to the hod-carrier at all, it probably brought a suggestion to make hay while the sun shone, for he and Jimmy filled and emptied glass after glass while they smoked black cigars and chatted over the "ould times" when they were single. Sullivan kept the clearer head, for it was part of his business to do so, but even his speech grew thick and he spilled his stock as he served the two or three late customers that came in before he and McGheoghan were left to themselves.

Long after the usual time of closing, Sullivan's wife, who lived over the saloon, looked timidly in through the back door and asked Jimmy when he was coming home.

"Git to —— out o' here wid ye, and mind yer own business," was his answer. "That's the way I talk till my wife, Morris," he said. "You'd be bether off if you'd give yer own a taste av the same when she's deludherin ye wid her hifalutin idees."

McGheoghan recalled the time when he had known Mrs. Sullivan as pretty Kitty Lafferty; and the barkeeper's manner jarred the pleasant recollection; he did not like to see his old flame treated like that. He did not relish free advice, either; and when Sullivan spoke slightingly of Mrs. McGheoghan it roiled him. Things were rather hazy just then, but the notion crept into his head that he was doing wrong, and that Sullivan was rejoicing in his lapse from virtue. To maintain his dignity he considered it necessary to impress Sullivan with the fact that the McGheoghans were people to be respected, so he says:

"Me name's Mowreechy."

"That's another fool idee yer wife's made ye swally. Morris was good enough for ye when ye was a bye, but when ye got married yer wife must go changin' yer name. But ye'r Morris for all that."

"Me name's Mowreechy, and if ye go fer to call me out av it, or say me wife's name ag'in, I'll bate ye wid that mug."

Sullivan leered at him derisively.

"Yer name's Morris McGheoghan, and yer wife's a flannel-mouthed chaw like yerself."

The impact of a beer glass over Sullivan's left eye caused him to measure his length upon the floor. The shock roused him, however, and in a moment the two were fighting like cats. The crash of overturned tables and chairs and of breaking glass would have caught the attention of the patrol had that individual not been dozing in the next block. It would have awakened Mrs. Sullivan had she not been at that particular time half asphyxiated in her sleep by a smoking mantel-spread which had fallen over the lamp left burning for her husband.

The fire had smouldered for half an hour and the room was filled with smoke, when a spark fell on the table and ignited a bit of paper. In an instant the room was in a blaze. A burning curtain caught the eye of a late traveler, who turned in an alarm. The hook-and-ladder truck dashed up to the place, and a fireman snatched the stupefied woman out of a burning bed, but he did not notice the adjacent alcove where little four-year-old Kitty Sullivan lay dreaming.

When Maurice McGheoghan was shoved away from his antagonist he thought Jimmy's friends, had come to take part in the scrimmage. But the firemen's uniform and Sullivan's despairing cry of: "My God! where's

"MOWREECHY," HE CRIED, "GOD BLESS YE!"

Kitty?" roused an idea in his head. The McGheohans of Galway had noble blood in their veins, and never deserted a female in distress.

The firemen were busy saving Sullivan's stock. They did not heed the uncouth figure, with bloody face and torn clothes, reeling through the back door and up the narrow stairs. Through stifling smoke and in water and flame he groped his way, while Sullivan was out on the street kneeling beside his wife, sprinkling her face and chafing her wrists.

She opened her eyes and gasped: "Kitty." Sullivan had thought that of course the child was saved with its mother, but now the fear struck him that this was not so. He ran from one to another of the bystanders, frantic in his search, but no one had seen the little girl. As in desperation he turned to the burning rookery, a window crashed out, and a burst of flame lighted his road to the little stairway. He sprang toward it and nearly overturned a staggering, ragged, blackened and begrimed man carrying in his arms a bundle of bedclothes, from out of which a voice called to Jimmy:

"Papa!"

He threw both arms round the pair, and two soiled and bruised faces met in an Irish embrace.

"Mowreechy," he cried, "God bliss ye!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

Spurs for Gamecocks.

Steel heels or spurs for fighting cocks to take the place of the natural spur are made in twenty or more varieties in shape and length; they are sold all over the world. In the United States spurs of different styles are used in different parts of the country; longer spurs are used in the south than in the east and north. The shortest spurs are used in New York. The standard length here is one and one-quarter inches; in all other parts of the country the length is advanced. A good set of steel heels costs ten dollars. The spur projects from one side of a ferrule or socket, which is like an open thimble; a leather band is attached to the base of the ferrule. The natural spur is sawed off, and when the steel spur is used the ferrule is placed over the stump and the leather band is wound round the cock's leg and bound with twine; a pad or cushion is placed within the rim of the ferrule to make it fit the stump of the natural spur snugly and firmly. It is said that if a well-bred gamecock, which had been without food until it was nearly starved, should then be placed in the presence of another gamecock and of food, it would fight before it would eat; in other words, that it would rather fight than eat.—N. Y. Sun.

The Broken Plate Club.

In a little village of the department of the Nord there exists a curious brotherhood. It is called the Broken Plate club. This is its history: A few years ago some merchants and manufacturers were dining together when a plate rolled from the table, and, falling into the fireplace, broke. As it happened, the number of the fragments exactly corresponded with that of the guests. The coincidence was regarded as a good augury, and then and there a society was formed which imposed upon its members the bonds of brotherhood.

Each man as he left carried away with him his fragment of the plate. According to the rules no new member was to be introduced, and at each death the piece of porcelain which was in the possession of the deceased is restored to the president, who glues the fragments together. The last surviving member of the club is charged with the duty of cementing his piece to the rest, and when the plate has thus been reformed it is to be buried.—London Telegraph.

—Great men often produce their ends by means beyond the grasp of vulgar intellect, and even by methods diametrically opposite to those which the multitude would pursue. But, to effect this, bespeaks as profound a knowledge of mind as that philosopher evinced of matter, who first produced ice by the agency of heat.—Colton.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Raspberry Shrub: This is made of four quarts of berries to five pounds of sugar, to which is added one ounce of tartaric acid to give acidity. There is no liquid except the juice of the fruit.

—Baked Salmon: Scale and dry a fresh salmon; take out the bone by splitting down the back; salt it well, and allow to stand till the brine is drained off; then season with mace, cloves and a little red pepper, pounded fine; place the salmon in a covered pan, with bay-leaves, and cover it with butter; place in the oven, and when done drain it from the gravy. Allow to cool, and pour over clarified butter.—Harper's Bazar.

—Fricasseed Calf's Liver: Two pounds of liver cut into strips half an inch thick and finger length. Dredge them with flour and fry to a light brown, turning often. Mince fine two young onions and a little parsley, and beat them in half cup of gravy. Put in the liver, add half cup of hot water, a tablespoonful of butter, a tablespoonful of catchup, salt and pepper to taste. Let it boil up and serve, pouring the gravy round the liver.—Chicago Record.

—A Good Chili Sauce: Take twenty-four large ripe tomatoes, four white onions, three green peppers, four tablespoonfuls of salt, one of cinnamon, half a tablespoonful of ground cloves and allspice mixed, a teacupful of sugar with a pint and a half of vinegar; peel the tomatoes and onions; chop fine; add the vinegar, spices, salt and sugar; put into a preserve kettle; set over the fire and let boil slowly for three hours. Bottle and seal. This ketchup is excellent, and will be found much less trouble than the strained tomato ketchup.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Salad Dressing: This valued recipe for salad dressing is a well-tried favorite, and will be liked by those who prefer to use cream rather than olive oil. It will keep for two or three days, or more: One egg; butter, the size of a filbert; one large teaspoonful of white sugar. Beat these well together, and slowly add two tablespoonful of cream, a little pepper and salt, one-half teaspoonful of mustard; when all is beaten to a smooth cream stir in quickly four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, and set in boiling water until it is cooked. (Some will prefer it sweeter and with less vinegar, in which case reduce the strength of the vinegar, and increase the amount of sugar.) It should be of a rich, creamy consistency when done, and should be strained through a fine sieve unless perfectly free from lumps.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

NOTES ON THE FASHIONS.

Some Fresh Fancies in Feminine Apparel.

Women have given attention to dress, it is true, and have been accused of bestowing a great deal too much thought on it, but this attention has been not so much to originate and devise adaptable things as to fit and conform and assimilate ready-mades and utilize the things on hand. It is as though instead of using the product of the garden to make a meal of, women are gradually arriving at that state of mind and intelligence where they propose to raise the garden stuff and raise precisely what they want, instead of taking it, as it were, from the market-gardener's hand to the table. If a woman wants a special sort of fabric for a particular use, she has learned how to go to work to get it. If the design of her dress does not please her, she locks herself into her room and, with lap-board and table, sets her wits to work to make one that will. If the ready-mades are unbecoming, she sits or stands before a mirror and works and cuts and tries and manipulates until she finds what pleases her. And she does not do this without method and excellent reasons for every pinch and plait and every bow and loop and bias.

For a good many years, dress has been run on exceedingly narrow lines. A woman bought an alpaca, a cashmere, Henrietta broadcloth, cambric or organdie and made it up according to the occasion on which she was to wear it. If she wanted her cashmere in an evening dress, there it went; if she wanted a street costume, all the same, the street costume it was. Her broadcloth was cut and trimmed for a dressy suit or it made a severely plain tailor costume. Gradually certain fabrics are coming to be used for certain purposes, and there is good reason to suppose that the lines will be more strictly drawn in the future than they have been in the past.

The French woman is an artist in this respect, and always has her costumes made to suit the occasion on which they are worn.

Exceedingly dressy out-of-door costumes are made from glace silk and all moderately thin materials with changeable effects. An attractive dress is made of canvas-woven silk fabric worn over any bright color. The canvas is made of the natural silk fiber, and is therefore a sort of pongee color or in paler shades to an ecru. It is not generally known that some silk fiber is of a yellowish cast, while other sorts are of the most pearly white. From these extremes of color there is every variation. This is said to depend largely on what the silk worm feeds on, and this being the case, the question naturally arises: Why not feed the worms on some harmless colored food and produce silks in the varying tints of the rainbow?

Among the favorite colors of the season are brown of all shades, yellow, gray—which, by the way, is for the moment simply a rage in some of the ultra fashionable circles of London—heliotrope, blue and light shades of green. There is a green, with a suggestion of rose, that is exceedingly effective when well handled. Red is used to some extent, and is very popular for fancy waists, provided it is becoming to the wearer.

Black, brightened with any of the popular colors, is in the height of fashion, and thin black made up over color is among the most becoming and stylish of combinations.

A great deal of exceedingly fine jet is used, and embroidery and lace enter into the make-up of nine-tenths of the most popular dresses of the year. Batiste and organdie dresses are made with skirts gored at the front, the side breadths slightly sloped off and the back breadths plain. Many of these dresses are worn over linings of the color of the figure; for example, a white organdie, with pink spots, is made over a pink cambric or sateen slip. All white dresses of thin material are trimmed with cream-colored laces and worn over color. With all white they are not so much liked, although they are occasionally seen.—N. Y. Ledger.

—The year at Lafayette has been a very gratifying one to its officers and alumni. There has been marked progress in many directions, notably in enlarged facilities in some of the scientific departments and enlarged laboratory rooms.

—Woman suffrage has made a point in Maine. The right of women to vote in parish meetings of the Episcopal church in that state was granted at the diocesan convention, held in Portland recently, by a vote of 16 to 14. The right to hold office in the church is still withheld.

—At a gathering of ministers and members of various denominations at New York recently the question arose as to how many in the company could repeat the books of the Bible in their order. Out of the two hundred or more present, one person only, and that person a woman, had the confidence to raise her hand and acknowledge that she was equal to the occasion.

—Thirty-nine convert's to a new sect called the New York Light Community, which seems to be run by some new women, were baptized by a woman evangelist and exponent of the new doctrine in a creek near Arthera, Ill. There were fourteen men and twenty-five women converts, and fully five thousand spectators lined the banks. The woman preacher, Mrs. Kate Miller, who put the converts through and under, is fifty years old, about five feet six inches tall, and weighs 180 pounds, and she immersed the big batch, which included persons of all ages and weights, with ease, exactness and expedition.

—Within the last five years the impossibility of any scholar's mastering unaided the literature of his subject has produced in Germany a series of philosophical encyclopedic outlines. "Grundrisse," in which a number of scholars combine to give the latest information in their special field. Iwan Muller has edited the outline for Classical philology, H. Paul that for Germanic, and G. Grober that for Romance philology. A "Grundrisse" for Indo-Arian language, edited by Dr. G. Bahler, of Vienna, is now announced, for which Prof. Lanman, of Harvard, will write the Vedic grammar, and Prof. Bloomfield, of Johns Hopkins, the history of Sanskrit literature.

BROTHERLESS GIRLS.

They Are Very Apt to Grow to Be Priggish Women.

The single daughter of a house without sons is, of all women, the most apt to grow into a self-sufficing prig, and a number of daughters without brothers will often display, in a less degree, the same proclivity. There is often, too, a furious spirit of rivalry. Brotherless women have had no chance of learning, as children, in what they can rival or surpass men, and in what they must infallibly, by the operation of the mere laws of nature, be outstripped. They have not the opportunity of learning, without thinking, wherein men intend to rule, have ruled from the beginning, and will rule to the end. It is not, as a rule, from the houses where there are sons and daughters both that mannish women come, but from the houses where there are no sons, or where the sons are exceptionally weak.

The boys in a mixed household beat the girls in all boys' work so easily, so continuously and so permanently that rivalry in their pursuits dies away, and the girls turn, without effort and without much disappointment, to their own proper field. Above all, they learn early and without pain the grand art, first, perhaps, of practical feminine arts, of "putting up with things," including a certain amount of what many women now describe as oppression—the greater expenditure, for instance, on boys, who are destined to maintain households; their greater liberty, which proceeds from unalterable circumstances and can not be changed, and their much later introduction into the active life and business of the world. The girls with brothers, we think we may assert with confidence, are as wives much less liable to get irritated with their husbands than the girls without them.—London Spectator.

Removing Putty.

Removing putty from old sashes is is not so easy a job as would at first sight appear. It is almost impossible to cut the putty out with the usual hacking knife and hammer without damaging the woodwork. To avoid these inconveniences, and the danger of accidents to clothing and hands when strong acids are used, a good plan is to employ petroleum, at intervals of half an hour, generally being all that is required. It may be stated as a reason for this that petroleum penetrates into the pores of the putty, and dissolves the hardened linseed oil. In a short time the putty regains its original plasticity, so that in two or three hours after the application of the first coat, one can, with the point of a knife, cut out the putty with ease.—Engineering Magazine.

"PEACE HATH HER VICTORIES."

Story of a Man Who Fought in a Dozen Bloody Battles.

From the Post-News, Alexandria, Minn.

When anything good comes to an old soldier the world is always glad to hear of it. It is therefore with especial pleasure that we listened to the story of Mr. William Miller, of Alexandria, Minn. Mr. Miller is an old soldier with a record to be proud of. The year 1861 found him prosperous and happy in a comfortable home in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. He realized that his country needed him and went as a private with Company K, of the 60th New York. Assigned to the army of the Potomac, his life was not the "pic-nic" described by one of our Minnesota Congressmen. He went through the campaigns until after Gettysburg and then went to Tennessee with General Hooker to relieve the tension at Chickamauga and ended with Sherman on his march to the sea.

Four years of such work had its effect. He was a young man possessed of a fine physique and must have had great strength; but soon after enlisting he suffered with most of his regiment from an epidemic of the measles and from that time had touches of sciatic rheumatism. He began doctoring for it, but in the army, in such campaigns as our boys saw who followed Hooker and Sherman, is a poor place to cure rheumatism and especially sciatic, the most difficult form of rheumatism to reach. After the war he was mustered out with honor, and his trouble increased, also his kidneys bothered him greatly. In a year he decided to come west to Minnesota and settled in Blue Earth County, where he lived until nine years ago. He was terribly crippled and suffered agonies of pain. He tried doctors of all kinds and medicines of every description.

Finally he decided to go still further west, and selling his farm he went to the coast. But the damp air had a still more harmful effect and he, suffering what only fellow victims of sciatica can realize, took almost the next train back, and came here to Alexandria where he had relatives and which he knew to be a beautiful country of lakes with good schools for his children. Building a house and buying a small farm near town, he again took up his fight with sciatica. Sometimes he could do a little work, and in the fields when attacked with the pains, he would often lie down and have to be helped up again. He tried every known remedy, for such was his suffering that his right leg has been shortened fully two inches. His kidney trouble also increased so that he could only rest a couple of hours at a time when he would be obliged to get up, not having control of himself. Finally last winter, the sarcasm of destiny added the grip to his ills, and when he was recovering from it, but unable to leave his room, "when it was just as hard to sit up as to lie down, or to lie down as sit up," as he expressed it, he got hold of a pamphlet telling about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He decided to try them, as he said, "they might help, and fifty cents would not ruin me."

He bought one box and before he had taken a half of this box he felt wonderful effects, and he soon, as he himself put it, "felt light and active, full of spring and vigor." He had no more trouble whatever with his kidneys, but could sleep all night without getting up once, and though he took but two boxes of the Pink Pills, he says he has never since had a twinge of the rheumatic pain. When seen on last Saturday, he was at a neighbor's giving a kindly hand at repairing a pump, and this old soldier, 63 years of age, a veteran of a dozen bloody battlefields, showed greater strength than the young fellows he was helping and worked with all the vigor of youth. His case to those who know him, and to himself especially, seems almost miraculous, and he was willing, at our solicitation, to tell of it so that others, maybe old soldiers afflicted as he was, should have the benefit of this wonderful medicine.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 18th day of April, A. D. 1895.

[SEAL.] LEWIS EVANS, Notary Public.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Simple Enough.

A gentleman once asked a lawyer what he would do provided he had loaned a man five hundred dollars and the man left the country without sending any acknowledgments. "Why, just write him to send an acknowledgment for the five thousand dollars you lent him, and he will doubtless reply stating it was only five hundred. That will suffice for a receipt, and you can proceed against him if necessary."—Harper's Round Table.

No Cause for Anxiety.

"I am so anxious every time John goes on the road," said the young wife of a commercial traveler.

"His life is insured, isn't it?" asked her friend.

"Yes, my dear, it is."

"Then I don't see what you are so anxious about. You look perfectly lovely in black."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

A Votary of Fashion.

"I want to see some bureaus," said a Pittsburgh woman to a clerk in a furniture store.

"Yes, madam. This way, please."

"I want you to show me one of those political literary bureaus I read about in the papers. They seem to be all the style now."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

THE CHINESE DRAMA.

Ludicrous Expedients to Supply Mechanical Deficiencies.

The average theater-goer shows a wonderful familiarity with the librettos of the more popular dramas as the following incident will illustrate. An actor one night stammered and broke down in the middle of his piece. Instantly a man rose in the body of the pit, uttered a coarse epithet, and savagely gave the cue word, accompanied by a piece of sugar-cane hurled at the blundering actor's head.

A great drawback to the Chinese theater is the absence of artificial scenery, movable pieces, painted canvas, and other accessories to stage illusions. To supply this deficiency the stage manager resorts to some very ludicrous expedients implying a faculty for imagination largely in excess of that with which a Chinaman is usually credited. Chairs, benches, and tables are made to serve conventional uses never contemplated by the manufacturer. For instance, two tables three or four feet across represent a bridge. When the spectator sees benches and chairs piled up eight or ten feet high he must imagine himself at the base of one of China's classic mountains. When he sees a dirty piece of canvas spread upon the floor he is standing on the shore of some historic lake. When he sees men seated upon chairs with paddles and poles in their hands he must by a violent effort of the imagination behold a passing barge or a regatta of dragon boats on the Pearl river. A courier plays riding horseback by striding a bamboo pole with a tuft of hair tied to the end. When he reaches the other side of the stage he announces his arrival at Peking. Soldiers fall in battle, lie still a few moments, then coolly get up, walk across the stage to a seat and sit down to fan themselves in full view of everybody.

The audience, like little children, do not appear to feel the incongruity and absurdity of such performances. They cackle and grin out of pure delight. If the critical American feels no joy, or if he must stop his ears to the shrill pipes and clashing cymbals, so much the worse for him. He is to be pitied. The poor foreign devil has no esthetic tastes, that is all.—Frederick J. Masters, in Chautauquan.

When Greek Meets Greek.

Breadstuff (the baker)—The expressman left your package at my place by mistake.

Doneup (the laundryman)—So? What did they contain?

"Hydrochloric acid and pumice stone."

"Not mine. By the way, three parcels of your stuff were left at my laundry this morning."

"You don't say. What was in 'em?"

"Alum, glucose and oleomargarine."

Twenty minutes later they meet face to face at the complaint window of the express company.—Washington News.

She Seems to Have Enjoyed Her Trip.

* * "We arrived in St. Paul from the West just before breakfast, and after a pleasant ride on Summit avenue took the 'Day Express,' via 'The North-Western Line,' for Duluth. This line certainly represents the highest type of modern perfection in railway accommodations. We were ushered into the luxurious Parlor Car, most elegantly and comfortably furnished with velvet carpet, easy chairs and foot stools, which all seemed to solve the problem of comfort and luxury while traveling. A beautiful drawing-room is at the disposal of sleepy travelers, where, on downy pillows and with curtains drawn, they can enjoy an after-dinner nap before arrival at Duluth. From a woman's standpoint we can thoroughly indorse what a celebrated eastern writer once said of this splendid car on this train: 'A veritable palace of comfort and luxury rushing along on wheels o'er smooth and polished tracks.'

"One improvement I noticed on 'The North-Western Line' to Duluth over what seems to be an established custom among railways was the service of a white instead of a colored porter. More courteous and kindly attentive he could scarcely have been, anticipating one's wants in every way. We enjoyed our trip from St. Paul to Duluth very much, and for a day trip I never enjoyed so much comfort and such a solid restful trip as I made on 'The North-Western Line.' And like all women, I am particular and more or less cranky, and it takes a good deal to suit me and bring out a compliment when traveling."—Mrs. F. W. S.

"You used to do a little trading on 'change, didn't you, Higgs?" "Yes." "Were you a bull or a bear?" "Neither, Blobbs. I was a lamb."—Chicago Tribune.

big bulky pills were in general use. Like the "blunderbuss" of that decade they were big and clumsy, but ineffective. In this century of enlightenment, we have Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, which cure all liver, stomach and bowel derangements in the most effective way. If people would pay more attention to properly regulating the action of their bowels, by the use of these little "Pellets" they would have less frequent occasion to call for their doctor's services to subdue attacks of dangerous diseases. The "Pellets" cure sick and bilious headache, constipation, indigestion, bilious attacks and kindred derangements of liver, stomach and bowels.

DELANO DIARY

—The Christian Endeavor's Sociable held at the City Hall, on Tuesday evening, was well patronized, and was quite an enjoyable affair.

—County Superintendent Lee is entertaining quite a number of school teachers at the schoolhouse today.

—J. D. Young returned, Saturday, from a "trip around the horn" He reports Crow River, at the iron bridge between Helvetia and Meyers stations as being perfectly dry.

—On Saturday the Hoisington's shipped their big thresher to Murdock, Kandyohi county. They took with them a crew of men and are prepared to thresh all the stacks they can find.

—School Treasurer Borsch had the pleasure of placing to the credit of the School district a $400.00 check received from State Auditor Dunn,on Wednesday, from the High School appointment.

—The Delano campers at Lake Minnetonka have returned home, after having had a six week's nice time. Friends from Ohio made a part of the company a few weeks but have gone back to the Buckeye state.

—Things in Delano are picking up, considerably in various ways and a general air of business prosperity pervades the air. The big crops gives people assurance of plenty to live on for a year to come, even if they get small prices for what they have to sell.

—The Commission appointed to locate the Fourth Hospital for Insane, have decided to start out on Oct. 15, to examine into the qualifications of the various sites offered. They will be at Delano and look over our location. Arangements should be made, committies appointed, and things generally, set in order to show up our offer as it deserves to be seen.

—Some grumbling has recently been heard concerning wheat grading at our local elevator. Last years grades, are according to law, still in force and the Country Warehouse Law obliges country buyers to grade in accordance with the grading at terminal points. The rules established last season, are to be used until September. Persons dissatisfied can have their matter settled by sending samples of grain to the Chief Inspector of Grain, St. Paul, Minnesota.

—Dr. O. R. Fassett, of Rockford, called yesterday and informed us that he would leave next week for Philadelphia to meet his wife who has been on an extended visit. They are to return home in two weeks. The Dr. has a curiosity in the way of a diploma he received in 1840 from Jefferson College and which was in one office that was burned, but being in a Japaned case escaped being consumed. The ink with which the professors names were signed has faded until the signatures are scarcely legible. 55years is a long time to practice medicine, but the doctor is still at it.

—Mayor W. J. Tousley, Recorder T. R. Briggs, and Councilmen Gus. A. Koenig, N. C. Chafin, and E. E. Ritchie of Howard Lake, visited Delano Saturday morning, and looked over our system of waterworks. They were highly pleased with the wokings of the system. Howard Lake has voted $7,000, for the purpose of putting in a system and expect to have it in running order before cold weather. Most of the visiters favored supplying Howard with good drinking water in preference to that which could be used only for other purposes. That is right, good drinking water will put out a fire as well as will water that is unfit to drink.

—Jay W. Ingison, Evangelist, will begin services in the M. E. Church Sunday night at 8:00 o'clock: to continue each evening for one week.

—Read the letter from Chicago, by Willie Mowatt aged 10 years, in another column.

—Quite a force of husky citizens contributed a few hours services to the new Presbyterian Church by assisting in unloading a car load of lumber Wednesday.

—This is a free country and people are not obliged to listen to loud talk from saloons and other places as they walk the streets, unless they please to do so.

—Several pieces of new sidewalk have been laid under the superyision of Street Commissioner Belt, in the place of old walk condemned. It helps the looks of that part of town.

—On Monday evening the Board of Education voted to employ Miss Alta Clark, of Hamline, as teacher of the Grammar Department. This makes the corps of teachers full for the present But after school begins it may be found necessary to have more help in the primary departments.

—The Independence people turned out en masse, on Tuesday, and attended court at Minneapolis, where W. J. Peterson, of Maple Plain, was summoned to appear before Justice Bond in the History case, Attorney Lindsley was sick at home, so attorney Howard appeared for the defendent. Defendant's attorney called for a jury trial; this did not seem to suit the prosecution, so on their motion the case was dismissed, and costs taxed to prosecution.

County Cullings.

We see by the Journal Rev. Atchison will exhibit his war views and lecture at Buffalo Sept. 16. He is well worth hearing and his scenes are good.

Judge Pond has decided the case of Hewitt vs Wright County in favor of Howitt, anb the case of Dr. Lynch vs Wright County, in favor of the county.

Health officers, under the late ruling of Judge Pond, should see to it that they make a bargain with the village council for their pay in advance, if they desire to receive pay.

Senator Eaton says in this week's paper, "There has never been a line of plate matter editorially used in the Journal." Has he forgotten about those two old plate pieces about "Deep water ways to the sea" and "Judge Searl's candidacy for Congress," that appeared in the Eagle, Times, Journal and other Republican papers throughout the Sixth district, the fall Baldwin was elected to Congress?

A PASTORALE.

"An humble boy with a shining pail,
Went gaily singing down the vale,
To where a cow with a brindle tail,
On the alfalfa did regale.

"A bumblebee did gaily sail
Over the soft and shady vale,
Where the boy with the shining pail,
Milked the cow with a brindle tail.

"The bee fit down on the cow's left ear,
Her heels flew up through the atmosphere,
And through the leaves of a cottonwood tree,
The boy soared into eternity."

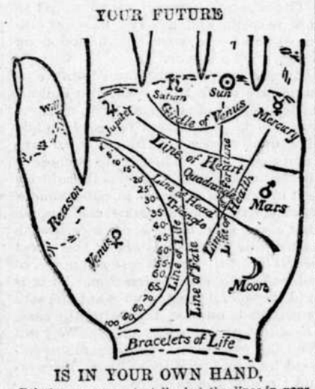
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND,

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1896 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

DOES TIME RULE ALL? NOT SO!

—o—

Time rules not all forsooth:
I would not say or think a word
That would not stand upright on truth
I'll say that while we are rulled by times
To some extent, alas my brother
We are ruled more oft by one another.

Time only changes future, form,
Time whites our locks like waters storm,
The rolling years bring decay
The hours change from night to day.
But what is this? that only can
Rule, the heart and form of man.

This faulty form of mine you see
But seeing it you see not me,
I live within this teat of clay
A simple tenant, day by day.
The walls with age will crumble down
But I, myself have victories crown.

The face may wear a hideous frown
The countenance for shame look down,
But time goes on, and pays no heed,
Nor knows of any pressing need,
If we as mortals could uncover
The smouldering coal t'would help a brother.

But we are content from day to day
We like the Jew another way
Pass by, nor heed the wail
Of the ship at sea without a sail.
The ship is wrecked, though words confessed
Are signals of the soul distressed.

We all are ships this life the main,
On which sail ones, neer sail again,
As ship and ship quite often meet,
So we, as storm beat hulks may greet,
And what we do, the help we've given,
Is purchas coin for ports in heaven.

So time rules all? Ah no! Alas
We rule each other here below
You by your smile help me to sail
With purer heart before the gail,
But of scorn and envy tell
Of souls sent helpless into hell.

So we rule time! And God rules all.
We trust Him and we cannot fall.
The main may surge, the billows swell
His "peace be still" the world will quell,
Because of love, and so we know
That love rules all, above, below.

—A. F. WILSON.

MONDAY, Sept. 9 will be bicycle day at the State Fair. The St. Cloud Bicycle Band is to head the procession.

JUDGE SEARLE, of St. Cloud, has rendered a decision recently, in the case of J. W. Merickel vs. Lewis Peterson, involving the question of usury, which may be of interest to some of our local money loaners as well as to borrowers. It seems the plaintiff sued defendant to recover pay on notes given to renew a $200, debt; that in addition to giving new notes and paying $20. interest he payed $12. besides as a bonus, etc. The law must be upheld says the Judge and the law forfeits the whole debt where usury is charged.

EVERYTHING goes to show that the two old parties are going to have their political fight over tariff again. It looks as if people had learned by this time the protection theory is exploded. That if we ever needed a protection tariff it is not now. But McKinley and his followers seem bound to try it again, and the Democrats are only to anxious to have them do so; but the people at large demand this time that men be elected to congress that will not be easily put off: some think the Wilson Bill, as amended little better than the McKinley Bill; but when they come to compare, and examine into the results attending the workings of the two bills they find even the hard fought battle over the Wilson bill was not in vain; they will find that manufacturing interests so soon closed under the McKinley bill are now under the Wilson bill being re-opened, advancements in wages are being made and that in spide of many other drawbacks the branches most affected by tariff are now thriving better than before.

NO LESS an authority than Senator Voorhees is reported as saying in a speech on labor day, at Terre Haute, the home of Eugene V. Debs, that "I know that Debs is suffering a penalty that the constitution does not warrant. A lawful conviction must be preceeded by an indictment and trial by a jury".

It is not to be expected that people will sit and see punishments inflicted on their fellow men without the warrant of law, and say nothing. Every man in this country is entitled to his rights, and should have them. There has been quite a talk, among some, of having the grand jury system abolished; if this were done it would be less difficult for the powers that be to get hold of people whose ideas run contrary to their own and incarcerate them in prisons throughout the country. Instead of abolishing the grand jury, the great safe guard of American liberty, it would be better to be more careful in the selection of jurymen. They should not be selected in a manner permitting their packing the jury in the interests of anyone. But they should be impartially selected from among citizens so that they may be really safeguards. Then their actions should be taken into consideration and not ignored, and men placed in jail regardless of them. If there is any question in the Debs case it should be settled now, and forever, clearly and distinctly, and the people not left to believe that one of their number is suffering unjustly.

A Better Feeling.

The Atlanta Cotton Exposition at Atlanta and the old soldiers reunion at Louisville, and the dedication of the National Cemetery at Chattanoogn, will take thousands of people south this summer, who have never before had an opportunity to see for themselves what kind of people live there and how they live. All their knowledge of southern life has been gathered from accounts given by soldiers who were looking at them as enemies: and whose hatred, in some cases, has not yet died out; or from reading, mostly newspapers, and colored reports for political effect. Many young men, who have grown up since the close of the bloody war will meet men like themselves, in many respects, who have been reared in the south. They will become acquainted and a new feeling of friendship will spring up between them. They will learn to judge each other by their own worth, by what they are and not by what their forefathers were. The old soldiers of both sides will in most cases cast aside their intense bitterness, will shake hands and talk over the deeds of valor of those over whose graves they now erect monuments, and cast tears; their hearts will be softened toward each other and a kindly regard will take the place of the former feelings, and the bonds of friendship will be cemented as nothing has done before. Our country can but profit by these minglings of the people of the whole country.

County Option.

People are tired of the terrible curse of intemperance. From one end of our land to the other, for generations past this has been one of the worst evils with which our people have had to contend. Men in high places, or in the lowly walks of life, are afflicted with an inordinate appetite for strong drink. If you wish to see the Mayor or other dignitaries or officials of your city, men elected by your votes to serve the people, you must seek them in some saloon, or wait until they sleep off the effects of last nights debauch before you can transact business with them. Some business men, but far from as many as formerly, appear in their stores, shops, or offices under the influence of liquors. The very men who use too much, themselves are finding out that it is not helping their business prospects at all. They hire sober men when they desire assistance; they do not care to employ a drunkard, at any price. Ladies and many men shun places where liquor rules; children are taught to keep as far from the evil as possible. The rising generation is feeling the effects of the hard work done by way of educating them in the evils of the alcoholics as a beverage. Times are ripening for another step in the lrdder upward towords the time when men will forsake, of their own choice will that can be cloud the mind and make them even lower than the animals about them.

License, and high license has been tried. It makes fewer saloons; but those in existence have a monopoly of the business, they run in violation of the laws of the land though under strict contract not to do so. The authorities are as much to blame for this as are the saloon keepers, they should administer the laws without fear or favor. The voters are to blame for repeatedly putting men in office who they know will wink at these things, and allow them to go on for the sake of a few more dollars in the city treasury. But the masses are becoming educated up to the point where they desire to see law and order prevail, and if one thing will not succeed they will try another. Churches are taking hold of the subject in earnest, the Father Mathew Temperance societies are growing in our very midst; their numbers pledged to total abstinence, are examples of what men can do when they will; other temperance organizations, are in the field and doing what they can. The W. C. T. U. are flooding the country with reading matter on this line, and it is working wonders. The M. E. Church of our state has resolved to advocate a county option bill, allowing each county to vote whether or not it will allow liquors sold as a beverage inside its limits. This law will, under existing laws, do away with the objections offered against village option. The county has, usually, to foot the bills for trials, and it has been claimed that if a town votes out saloons her people will obtain drinks in neighboring towns who license, and receive all the benefits. If drinkers are obliged to go into neighboring counties to drink they will do their mischief there, and the county that gets the license money will have to liquidate the expenses of the trial.

All the talk about a town can't run without saloons "has been proven wrong, clearly so in our own county. The village containing the most saloons has run behind in valuation of property and in population according to the latest reports on these subjects. The temperance towns of the county outstripping them in the race. Especially have temperance towns shown more valuations although having fewer citizens. What better evidence do people want? Is it not plain enough that in a farming community like ours, where men come to town and sell their produce, and return home with goods needed by his family will soon be better off, and more respected in the community than that of his neighbor who comes home drunk every time he visits the town? Is it not plain enough that in a village where men work, with clear heads and save their earnings they will soon accumulate more property on which to pay taxes than will he that spends all he can get in drink?

Since balloting is done by the Australian method no dependance can be placed in a man's word, alone, as to how he will, or now he will not vote, so there has been a big gain against the influencing of voters. Candidates are not so free to spend their money buying whiskey or beer to trade for votes: because the drinkers can sell out to as many candidates as come along and no one be the wiser for how he cast his ballot.

Too Little Money.

When statisticians inform us that the United States is doing business on a credit system, at the rate of from 90 to 92 percent of all business done, we are forced to the conclusion that the reason for this is that there is an insufficiency of currency with which to pay our debts. When money men find an opportunity thus presended for them to add to their funds they take advantage of it; they watch their chances to pay off laborers, or make purchases, giving, paper for pay, in the shape of notes, orders, etc. These the employee or the seller, must wait the time of the hirer or buyer to have cashed, or take to the banker or broker and have shaved. The moneyed men, sometimes appear to work together to have payments of city, or other work made in orders, not cash, purposely, so that a handsome little stake can be made by shaving the paper.

Coin or U. S. currency, one dollar as good as another, whenever presented in payement of debts or for commodities purchased would be much more satisfactory to the poor people in our country. Of course a few individuals, money sharks and such would be out of a job; but the laborer and the seller would be able to retain the small price they receive and not have to divide even that with the wealthier, befor they can spend it for the necessaries of life. Plenty of money, good money, is demanded, and should be furnished for transacting the country's business.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30, 1895.

Secretaries Carlisle and Lamont are the first members of the Cabinet to return from their vacations and settle down to work. They both found things moving nicely in their respective departments. Secretary Carlisle is being importuned to go to Kentucky for the purpose of trying to make peace between the State Central Committee and the candidates on the democratic state ticket, but he has not yet consented to do so, and it is not at all certain that he will.

Boss Quay, in the eyes of republican politicians, began his "second time on earth" when he knocked out his enemies and got a new and strong hold on the republican machine in Pennsylvania. Democrats also, are interested in a way, as it is among the probabilities that Quay's latest demonstration of his ability as a schemer and a trickster will cause him to be selected to run the republican national campaign next year.

Ex. Gov. Gulick, of Arizona, who has been spending the summer on the Atlantic Coast, is now in Washington. Speaking of National politics he said: "In my judgement the strongest man the democratic party can have at the head of its ticket is Ex. Secretary, William C. Whitney. With such a leader we can carry New York, New Jersy, and Connecticut beyond a doubt. The first two will be won by democracy this year, according to present indications. These three states are still essential to the success of the democratic party. It is folly, this talk about letting the east go and forming an alliance with the west. It is a snare and a delusion. The south cannot afford to alienate its old time allies for the sake of a doubtful coalition with western commonwealths of populistic tendencies. There is nothing to gain by such a combination. The right programme is to stick to New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. Here is the battle ground in '96, as it has been in the past, and here the democracy can conquer."

Hon. Chauncey F. Black, of Pa., president of the National Association of Democratic Clubs, has written a letter to Lawrence Gardner, of this city, secretary of the association, denying that any attempt was being made, as charged in recent publications, to commit the clubs on the silver question. In that letter he says: "We are all democrats. Let us stand faithfully by the national platform until a new one is made. I have my opinion on the silver question but I have placed on the executive committee of this association some of the most distinguished advocates of silver in the land, as witnesses, Meshlin of Tenn.; Carr, of N. C.; Clarke, of Mont.; Ankeny of Minn. and Richards, of Utah. Would any of these gentlemen be there if I were inclined to pack a committee against their views? Not a thought was taken of the silver question when the committee was appointed. We ask the cooperation of all democrats and all democratic clubs between the two oceans in support of those universally accepted democratic principles which are stated in the several articles of our constitution, and as to all else we abide the final determination of the regular nominating national convention.

It is understood that the report of the Nicaragua canal commission, which is now in the hands of Secretary Lamont, is favorable to the Canal, but bears somewhat heavily on the methods of the canal company, particularly as to estimates of the amount needed to complete the canal. The commission says it will take $115,000,000 to complete the canal, which is $45,000,000 more than the company's estimate.

Time brings changes. Under the Federal election laws, repealed by a democrtic Congress, one John I. Davenport, as U. S. Supervisor of elections for the city of New York, was for many years a sort of republican joss. He always had money to spend when he came to Washington which was often. Things have not gone so easily with him since he lost his occupation He rented a Washington house but this week the contents were seized by a constable because of an unpaid rent bill of $600. It is not right to rejoice at anybody's misfortunes, but there are lots of people who would find it very difficult to be sorry for John I. Davenport's troubles.

Book Agents.

MARKVILLE, Sept. 2, '95.

Say ye victims of Col. John H. Steven's authorized book agents. Did you know that Rockford's great sachem has spoken? That this gifted seer has once more used his mighty penetrating powers, and has proclaimed that each one of us poor dupes surely signed our names to the contracts for said books. We have simply forgot it you know; the affair occured so long ago. Of course such profane utterances at such a time as this, would seem to indicate that the seer might realize quite a rake off for his influence, in the sweet BUY and BY. There are some of us fortunately whose memory is not in the least impared. We know our names are genuine forgeries. We know of a party whose house was entered by these book agents. the man's photograph taken, and then copied into these books and a bill of $118 presented for payment, we know that fraud and deception has covered all their actions, and money has in many instances been extorted from parties, who were in no way able to afford it.

We know that Mr. Frank Christlieb is a man of sterling qualities, a man that has never lent his influence to any villainous scheme to rob his neighbors and friends; who does not advise you to march up and pay your 18 or 218 dollars as the case may be, simply because these unmitigated wretches had dumped their trash into your door yard, presented your forged name and demanded your money.

We know there are ten men who were ready to testify that it was a simon pure case of forgery, insults and abuse to their families also, if these pirates called during there absence.

We know that the summonsing of Mr. Peterson to Minneapolis for trial was a last resort to fleece the honest farmer a little more, and that they struck the wrong man was beautifully demonstrated by the frenzied look, the blank despair that beamed from restless eyes, culminated in dismissing their own case and thus ends the second lesson.

We also know that those two book agents should receive, free, an honest, number one horse whipping, and then be sent up for forgery.

In conclusion I know I never put my name to any manner of contract, that I never saw a contract: was never invited to sign any kind of a paper. My Long Lake acquaintance thinks so, to the contrary notwithstanding.

S. R. SPATES.

The State Fair an Assured Success.

Every department of the State Fair, which opens at Hamline midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, on Sept. 9th, will be crowded to the limit this year. Secretary Randall writes us that for the first time in years the society has been compelled to turn applicants for space away. This result is due largely to the banner crop which has been harvested in Minnesota, and the satisfaction of the people with the result. The management of the Fair have provided an actractive series of an entertainment aside from the exhibition itself, and the Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, are to provide a series of entertainment in the forms of parades, bicycle carnivals, street illuminations and military pagents. Fair week in St. Paul and Minneapolis will be a gala week. The rail roads will make a rate of one fair for the round trip during all the week, good for return as late as Monday, the 16th.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Weather is warm and very dry, we are much in need of a good rain to soften up the ground for plowing and also to increase the volumn of water.

The auction sale at Maple Plain yesterday consisting of horses; one cow; one sheep, and farming impliments, was well attended; and most everything went cheap. One horse with four legs, two eyes, and looking just like any horse, sold for $1.50,

Cutting corn and plowing is the business of the farmer these days.

Rev. Hatch a blind man, preached in the A. C. Church at Armstrong two evenings last week, the attendance was large and the preaching very good

Wm. Hoisington and O R. Mc Gary went to Minneapolis to day on the early morning train.

Since the book ageut business has died out there is but little excitement in this neck of the woods.

Some of our old settlers still have a longing for Dixie.

Some of our dough faced politicians are trying to make the people believe because our country has a good crop this year that the money (silver) question will die out; has already, to a certain extent ceased to be one of the people. This is another of the devil's lies gotten up in order to fool the people. Are the farmers such fools that they can be choked of with 47 cents wheat and potatoes at 15 cts. per bushel? some may think that the farmers are a kind of a marketable class of people to be bought and sold like chattles; to a certain extent this may be true, but we are not all of the tribe of Esau who sold his birthright for a mess of potage.

Times do not seem to improve much as yet and we must have a reformation of some kind before they will. It may come in the way of free silver and it may come about in some other way.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
Square Type.
The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the gentler sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and you will admit that seeing these THUMBS is a part in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

THE new photograph of the heavens, which is being prepared by London, Berlin and Parisian astronomers, shows 68,000,000 stars.

IT is a fact that no married subject in Austria can procure a passport to go beyond the frontier unless he can produce a written consent from his wife.

AT Bremen, the largest sailing ship afloat has just been completed. She is called the Potosi, is a five-master, 394 feet long, 50 broad, with a draught of 25 feet, and a carrying capacity of 6,150 tons.

IT is estimated that the American people have already invested this year $25,000,000 in bicycles, $3,000,000 in arnica and $1,000,000 in sticking plaster. It has been a little hard on the horses and the savings banks.

IT has been positively demonstrated that tobacco is one of the prime causes of color blindness, and men who are employed in positions where it is necessary to distinguish color are cautioned against excessive smoking.

THE western woman who refused to support her husband in the style to which he had been accustomed is another indication that society is going to the demnition bow-wows. If her example should be generally followed what would become of the dude?

CIVILIZATION and education saluted the Shoshone Indians with startling effect when the Princeton students who were visiting Chief Washakie gave their college yell. The effect was electrical. Some of the Indians endeavored to stop their ears, others retreated, and a few rushed from their tents, seized their rifles, and awaited results. The chief himself, forewarned by the interpretor, was unmoved.

THERE are about a dozen salmon canneries now running in Alaska, and the output this year will be about 2,350,000 dozen cans. A big industry in packing clams and making and bottling clam juice has recently been established and about 50,000 dozen cans of clams were put up this year. Salt cod, herrings and other such standard salted fish products have just begun to push their way into the Oregon and Washington markets.

A SURE and somewhat spectacular method of suicide was taken by James Fisk, who killed himself at Beaver, Ore., a few days ago. He stored a great quantity of giant powder in his house—under his bed, from all that could be surmised after the event—and blew himself and most of his house into nothingness. The coroner would not hold an inquest in the case, because all that could be found of the suicide's body was part of a foot.

IT is telegraphed all over the world that Miss Annie S. Peck, of Boston, has climbed the Matterhorn, a peak in Switzerland; being the third woman to accomplish that feat. Nearly every day a large number of American women ascend Pike's Peak, a mountain of about the same height as the Matterhorn. The ascent is comfortably made, without danger to life or limb, in a steam car, and that is the way the Americans would go up the Matterhorn if it were in this country.

AUSTIN CORBIN'S great park in New Hampshire attracts the increasing attention of tourists as one of the wonders of this country. The mere surface facts about the park, such as that it includes 25,000 acres, that it is stocked with buffalo, a herd of seventy-five; wild boar, moose, elk, deer, foxes, partridges and other game, four-footed and winged, do not tell all its wonders, which never disappoint the expectation of visitors. The public is admitted free after complying with certain simple regulations.

THE new woman was very much in evidence in Kentucky the other day. One of them prosecuted a man for knocking her down when she had only hit him a few times with a shovel. Another vanquished with a whip a scoundrel that had assaulted her. A wronged wife whipped another woman for alienating her husband's affections, and then caused her arrest. Finally, a young woman whose husband had sold her for $20 in cash, a jug of whisky and a suit of clothes, not only ran away from her purchaser, but took with her his nephew and all his portable property within her reach.

AS SHOWING the readiness with which the traffic of the great lakes responds to any attempt looking toward its improvement, it is stated that in the twelve months that have elapsed since the Hay lake channel was opened, it has been used for the passage of 13,000,000 tons of freight. The interesting fact is adduced that, while the channel cuts off eleven miles of distance in getting from Lake Superior to the lower lakes, and cost the enormous sum of $2,165,000, the actual saving to the lake fleet by reason of its use the first season has been a trifle over 7 per cent. on its entire cost.

NEVER before in the history of transatlantic transportation have so many Americans gone abroad as during the past summer, and it is estimated that $23,000,000 has been spent in London this season by Americans alone. For the quarter beginning with the 1st of May and ending with the 1st of August the seven great steamship lines poured Americans into Europe at the rate of about 3,800 a week, or a total which may be roughly estimated at nearly 98,000. Fully 10,000 more came over by the less important boats. Thus about 58,000 were added to the large number of transient Americans in Europe.

A DAY OFF.

Toilers of America Indulge in a Big Jubilee.

Labor Day Is Observed in an Appropriate Manner in a Number of Cities—Parades and Picnics Occupy Their Attention.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Dissension marked the celebration of Labor day, 1895, in Chicago, and two rival organizations of labor marched in separate parades. This was the result of the long-pending dispute between the Labor congress and the Trade and Labor assembly.

The honors of the day rested with the Labor congress. Twelve great divisions, numbering about 15,000 men, assembled on the lake front and Michigan avenue at 11 o'clock, and half an hour later commenced their march. At Union park the parade was reviewed by J. Keir Hardie, Frank Smith, of London, and John Swinton, of New York.

A mass meeting at the Auditorium Monday evening addressed by Keir Hardie and his associates concluded the celebration of the Labor congress.

The parade of the Building Trades Council which is affiliated to the Trade and Labor assembly included seven divisions numbering about 20,000 members. Starting from Market and Randolph streets they marched north to Ogden's grove, where they concluded the day with a picnic.

The Bricklayers' union, which is one of the strongest, refused to participate in either parade but held a demonstration at Blue Island.

The Day in Debs' Home.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Sept. 4.—Labor day was celebrated here with a parade in the morning and exercises and amusements at the fair ground in the afternoon. There were 10,000 persons at the grounds, many of whom listened to the speeches of Senator Voorhees and Col. McLean, ex-deputy commissioner of pensions. Col. McLean had been introduced to speak, when there were calls for the reading of the letter from Eugene Debs, and so persistent was the demand that the speaker had to pause and suspend his remarks to permit the letter to be read. Senator Voorhees referred to this incident later on and said it was natural that Debs' fellow citizens wanted to hear from him. The senator said:

"I consulted with Debs counsel when the case was before the supreme court and I know that Debs is suffering a penalty that the constitution does not warrant. A lawful conviction must be preceded by an indictment and trial by a jury. A ranker, grosser and bitterer piece of injustice never blotted the pages of our federal judiciary. I am the last person to be responsible for William A. Woods because I opposed his confirmation by the senate. I did so because he is a narrow man. He has plenty of ability but he lacks the underlying principles of honesty. I have no fear in denouncing the decision of the supreme court."

Debs' Latest Letter.

Following is a synopsis of the letter of Mr. Debs read at the fair grounds on Monday:

He quotes Judge Trumbull as saying that the doctrine announced by the court in the Debs case places every citizen at the mercy of any prejudiced or malicious federal judge who may think proper to imprison him. It is recited how King Darius, at the instigation of the councillers and captains, or, as in these latter days, the corporations and trusts, cast Daniel into the lion's den and how Daniel escaped harm. Debs say: "History repeats itself. I am not a Daniel, but I am in jail by the decree of an autocrat. I appealed from one despot to a whole bench for justice and the appeal was unheeded. To placate the corporations, the money power, the implacable enemies of labor, we were sent to prison."

He says his letter is not a wail of despondency. He finds it no task to see the wrath of the sovereign people aroused and all opposition to the triumphant march of labor consigned to oblivion. "Labor is uniting in one solid phalanx," says he, "to secure justice for labor. When that time comes, and coming it is—peacefully I hope—no judicial despot will dare to imprison an American citizen to please corporations. When this time comes bullion and boodle will not rule in congress and legislators and judges will not be controlled as many of them now are by the money power."

The Day at Other Points.

Ten thousand men and women were in line at Newark, N. J.

There was no parade in New York. Various unions gave picnics at the near-by resorts.

At Minneapolis Gov. Clough and others addressed an audience of 12,000 persons at Minnehaha park.

At Cincinnati trades unions joined in a street parade, public buildings, factories and many stores were closed.

Every labor union in Cleveland took part in the parade. Business houses were closed and the city was in holiday attire.

At Council Bluffs business was generally suspended. The principal feature was appropriate exercises at Lake Manwaa.

The parade in Milwaukee was the largest in the city's history. At Schlitze's park addresses were delivered and resolutions sympathizing with Debs were adopted.

Labor, organized and unorganized, united in a big parade at Bloomington, Ill. Hon. J. N Valentine, of San Francisco, and Hon. James Morrow, of St. Paul, addressed big crowds at the fair grounds.

St. Louis labor organizations united in a street parade, and afterwards assembled at Concordia park, where the day was spent in amusements of various descriptions.

At Kansas City fully 10,000 men participated in the parade. The floats were numerous and magnificent. At Fairmount park Gov. Morrill and Jerry Simpson delivered addresses.

All factories and many business houses were closed at Detroit. A monster parade of toilers marched through the streets. Exercises were held at Belle Isle park, and it was by long odds the most successful Labor day celebration ever held in the city.

At Lincoln, Ill., the day was observed with more enthusiasm than ever before. All mines, factories, trades and many business houses suspended for the day. Business blocks and residences were decorated and a lengthy parade traversed the streets.

Business was generally suspended at Grand Rapids, Mich., and 2,500 members of labor organizations paraded the streets. At Reed's lake the principal addresses were made by Hon. Thomas E. Barkworth, of Jackson, and Hon. Peter Doran, of Grand Rapids.

NIPPED IN THE BUD.

A Cuban Filibustering Expedition Comes to Grief.

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 31.—Friday afternoon United States Marshal Lannen, of Delaware, with a posse of Wilmington policemen and two Pinkerton detectives, left this city on the tugboat Meteor and landed at Penns Grove, N. J., where they arrested twenty Cubans, who had been taken there from this city Thursday night on the tug Taraus. The men had with them traveling bags and a supply of ammunition, pistols and machettes.

Acting United States Commissioner S. A. MacIllister informed the prisoners that they were charged with having set on foot, provided and prepared for a military expedition or enterprise to be carried on against the kingdom of Spain, in violation of section 5286 of the revised statutes of the United States and the proclamation of the president, etc.

Noted Outlaw Caught.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 4.—Pat Crow, desperado and train robber, was arrested Monday morning as he called for mail at the general delivery window of the post office, giving his name as Frank J. Murphy.

RUDELY AROUSED.

Sleepers in Eastern Cities Awakened by an Earthquake.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 3.—A distinctly perceptible earthquake shock was felt here Sunday morning about 6 o'clock.

Buildings perceptibly swayed, windows clattered and banged and clocks and pictures toppled from their places. The shock was most severely felt in the suburban districts, and in one part of George's hill, in Fairmount park, a fissure was opened permitting the entrance of a plummet which extended down over 100 feet without touching bottom. A large plate-glass window in the shade store of Michael Lett, 1914 Germantown avenue, was split from top to bottom. Similar cases are reported from other sections of the city.

BROOKLYN, Sept. 3.—Three very distinct earthquake shocks were felt by the residents of Brooklyn about 6 o'clock Sunday morning. The shock was pretty severe in Coney Island and many persons were awakened from their sleep. Pictures, crockery and even furniture in many houses were dislodged from their positions and the owners who were not awakened by the earthquake wondered how it came to pass.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Sept. 3.—At Long Branch the earthquake was felt more distinctly than at any other place along the coast. The residents in several instances ran out of their houses, thinking the buildings were about to fall. A prominent resident said his house rocked violently to and fro.

CHINESE IN ANOTHER RIOT.

Christians Are Injured and Houses Wrecked at Hok Chiang.

FOO CHOO, Sept. 3.—Rioters at Hok Chiang have attacked the Christians, wounded four and destroyed houses. The dangerous situation is the fault of the magistrate, who issued a proclamation slandering the Christians.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Shanghai saying that some Chinese Christians have been brutally harried near Hing-Hua, in the province of Fokien. Their houses were burned, their property plundered and their cattle stolen. One man was fatally wounded. A magistrate was asked five times to assist the Christians, but he refused to do anything to prevent the outrages. This magistrate had published an ambiguous proclamation referring to the Ku Cheng massacre inciting the rising against the Christians. Further and worse troubles are expected.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—A dispatch from Shanghai says that the sixteenth person sentenced for participation in the massacre of missionaries at Ku-Cheng has been executed. The dispatch adds that as yet nothing has been done in regard to the claims made by the British and American ministers respecting the attacks on missionaries at Sze Chuan.

SIXTEEN DEAD.

Bodies of Entombed Miners Buried Under 300 Feet of Water.

CENTRAL CITY, Col., Sept. 2.—The list of the supposed dead in the two mines Friday morning was sixteen. William Prisk was rescued alive. Ten men are known to be dead under 200 feet of water. Four are possibly in the tunnel. It is comparatively dry, but the water having stopped ventilation, the gases will kill them. Volunteers Friday morning were trying to force their way to where the entombed miners are supposed to be. State Mining Inspector Talbot arrived Friday morning to investigate the disaster, and said it would be impossible to rescue any more of the miners. The accident was due to carelessness. The danger was known but neither of the mines where the men lost their lives had pumping apparatus. When the water rushed in on them it dropped fully 10 feet per second and the wretched men literally sank out of sight.

As the Sleepy Hollow mine was always dry, no pumping plant is established there. Efforts have been made to lower the water with a 500-gallon bucket, but this apparently has no effect. Cornish pumps will be put in, but it will even then take sixty days to drain the mines and get to the bodies of the drowned miners. The water is now 300 feet deep in the Sleepy Hollow shaft and is still rising, while it has lowered in the Fisk over 100 feet.

INSURANCE SWINDLER.

Arrest of Dr. Fraker in Northern Minnesota.

DULUTH, Minn., Sept. 4.—Living in the wilds of northern Minnesota, 50 miles from a post office, with only a boy for a companion, Dr. George W. Fraker, who planned one of the most gigantic and successful insurance swindles of modern times, was Monday captured by officers who have been on his track for the past two years. Up to August 12 last there was a standing reward of $20,000 for his arrest offered by the insurance companies.

Fraker said he did not leave home on purpose to defraud the companies, but that while he was near the Missouri river he fell in. He swam across the river and got on land. The next day he read in the papers that he had been drowned, and concluded to carry out the deception and allow his heirs to collect the insurance.

[Fraker's life was insured for $58,000, and the heirs brought suit in the Kansas courts to recover. The case went to the supreme court, and was one of the most famous insurance cases of the country. The insurance companies were defeated in the final decision, which was recorded last month. It was always maintained by the companies that Fraker was alive, but his whereabouts were unknown. Recently it became known in some way that he was near Tower, where he was known under the alias of Schnell.]

Many Indicted.

PRINCETON, Ill., Sept. 4.—Mayor Martin Delmargo, of Spring Valley, was indicted by the grand jury Monday charged with giving aid and encouragement to the recent mob that drove the colored people out of the city by failure and refusal to perform his official duties. An indictment was returned against fifteen other persons who are charged with being active members of the mob and participating in the assaults upon the colored people. Other indictments charge Mayor Delmargo, Alderman Hicks, Alderman Riva and thirty-five persons in Spring Valley and Seatonville with operating saloons on the Sunday of the riots and on other Sundays in violation of the state law.

Ex-Gov. Anderson Dead.

DAYTON, O., Sept. 3.—News was received here Monday of the death of Charles Anderson, ex-governor of Ohio, at Kuttawa, Ky.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR VOTE.

Eminent Sir W. La Rue Thomas Elected Grand Master.

BOSTON, Aug. 31.—The third session of the twenty-sixth triennial conclave of the Knights Templar opened at the Masonic temple Thursday morning.

It was voted to suspend the reading of the records of Wednesday's proceedings, and on suggestion of Very Eminent Sir Henry W. Rugg it was decided to vote for grand master by roll call, first calling the grand encampment and then the states in alphabetical order.

The first ballot was as follows: Whole number, 301; necessary for choice, 151; Eminent Sir La Rue Thomas, of Marysville, Ky., received 297; Eminent Sir Samuel C. Lawrence, of Boston, 1; Eminent Sir Hugh McCurdy, 2; Eminent Sir R. H. Lloyd, of San Francisco, 1.

Sir Hugh McCurdy, in a complimentary address, announced his successor amid great demonstrations of enthusiasm.

Sir Knight Thomas replied in a speech expressing his deep sensibility of the honor conferred upon him.

While the ballots for the deputy grand master were being collected, the committee on time and place for the next meeting reported in favor of Pittsburgh as the place, and recommended the second Tuesday in October, 1898, as the time. The recommendations were unanimously adopted.

The voting for deputy grand master resulted in the election of Eminent Sir Knight Reuben H. Lloyd, now grand generalissimo. Sir Knight Lloyd responded in a brief but earnest speech. He said he should consider the honor more a tribute to the Pacific slope than to himself.

Other officers elected before adjournment were:

Grand generalissimo, Eminent Sir Henry B. Stoddard, of Texas; grand captain general, Very Eminent Sir George M. Moulten, of Illinois; grand senior warden, Very Eminent Sir Henry W. Rugg, of Massachusetts and Rhode Island; grand junior warden, Very Eminent Sir William B. Melish, of Ohio.

Sir W. H. Mayo, of St. Louis, was elected grand recorder. Grand Treasurer H. Wales Lines, of Meriden, Conn. was unanimously reelected.

A SURPRISE.

August Closes with a Striking Increase in Trade Volume.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Bradstreet's says of the trade situation:

"The concluding week of August surprises even the more optimistic with a striking increase in the volume of business with jobbers in staple lines at such centers as New York, Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and, to a more moderate extent, at distributing points in South Atlantic and gulf states, among them Charleston, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Savannah, Jacksonville, Birmingham and Dallas. In dry goods, millinery, shoes, hats, clothing and groceries the autumn demand is making itself felt, with the prospect for a further improvement in immediately succeeding weeks.

This situation is encouraged by a practical certainty of an unprecedentedly large crop of Indian corn and a phenomenal harvest of wheat in the northwest, as well as by the expected upward bound of prices of steel and iron, followed by a corresponding gain in demand.

"The gain in quotations for steel and iron is one of the sharpest within a week on record, and following, as it does, an advance of about 50 per cent. from the lowest levels reached in 1893-94 is enough to cause the question of whether a veritable boom is impending in these metals. A jump of nearly $2 per ton for Bessemer pig within a week, $1.50 for billets, $1 for charcoal pig, and western mills refusing to take orders for future delivery except at value, renders these industries excited.

"The total volume of general trade for the summer has been larger than in 1894, and in many instances than in 1893, with the outlook to-day for even a better fall demand than many had anticipated. The upward and onward impulse of this week is noticeable. All winter lines of goods have felt an improved request, and manufacturers and jobbers are preparing to handle a large fall trade. Even at the south, where recovery from the effects of the late trade depression was felt latest, jobbers in dry goods, hardware and groceries announce the receipt of many orders for September delivery. Even in Texas, where at the south the state has suffered from drought and at the north from continuous rains, and where the cotton crop is to be short in consequence, country merchants report a better feeling in all lines and a fair demand for wholesalers."

CHOLERA RAMPANT.

The Scourge Felt in the Hawaiian Islands—A Case in England.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—A dispatch received at the state department Saturday from Mr. Cooper, United States Dispatch agent at San Francisco, confirms the news that cholera had broken out at Honolulu. Mr. Cooper's telegram says that the steamer Monowai received the news from Mr. Ellis Mills, United States consul general in the Hawaiian islands, who met the vessel in an open boat and warned her off. Mr. Mills said there had been eight deaths among natives and Chinese and added: "There is no alarm and every precaution is being taken."

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 3.—The steamship Copty arrived Saturday from Yokohoma and Hong Kong, bringing the news, under date of August 18, that the Asiatic plague has broken out in Kobe, Japan, and that the crew of the Italian cruiser Umbria have suffered from it. Some of her seamen died of the complaint, and in one day two cases of the disease were reported on board.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 3.—An official report that has just been issued shows that there were 2,025 cases of cholera and 118 deaths from the disease in the government of Volhynia between July 11 and August 11.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—There has been a death from cholera at Grimsby, a seaport in Lincolnshire, and the authorities have been notified of the existence of another supposed case of the disease.

Cloudburst Near Bloomington, Ill.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Aug. 30.—This region was visited by a tornado and cloudburst Wednesday the like of which has never before been seen here. In thirty minutes the beds of dry streams were filled with boiling torrents filling the valleys until they were rivers in size so deep that horses had to swim to cross them. The Morris avenue road southwest of this city was overflowed, and while Mesdames Riddle and Roberts, of Heyworth, and daughters were trying to cross the valley their horse and carriage was swept from the bridge and the children drowned.

Cuban Rebels Routed.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Sept. 4.—On Saturday 850 troops commanded by Col. Canellas had an engagement with 3,500 rebels led by Maceo at San Indio, south of Ramon de las Yaguas, some 6 leagues east of Santiago de Cuba. The fight lasted eight hours and resulted in the rout of the rebels. The insurgents left thirty-six dead on the field and carried away with them on their retreat over eighty wounded. The government loss was one lieutenant and eleven men killed and forty-five wounded, including four captains.

A LOCAL COLOR TRAGEDY.

BY EDITH SESSIONS TUPPER.

WHEN Violet Lingard announced she was going in for literature there were those among us who scoffed. Violet was so alarmingly pretty, one would never suspect her of possessing brains. She was one of those girls with alluring faces—the sort of beaute-du-diable of which Ouida is always writing, eyes of most unholy blue and lips which could smile a man's soul away. A fascinating minx with the most graceful and winning manners; a being of moods, tender, repellant, kindly and icy by turns, she had created havoc and strewn devastation wherever her dainty feet had trod.

Suddenly she wearied of the endless round of gayety and fashion to which from her teens she had been accustomed and amazed her coterie by declaring her intention of writing realistic novels. Of course everyone said it was merely a fad and would soon blow over. But it didn't, that was the astounding part of it.

Her first novel attracted more than passing notice. She was commended for her original and audacious style, her clever plot and a certain dainty feminine touch. She was written about, interviewed, her beauty and talent were praised by the paragraphers and all the details of her luxurious life were brandished about the country. From being merely a typical society girl, a young woman of elegance and fashion, she suddenly became a somebody to be pointed out and stared at and raved about.

This spasmodic adulation pleased Violet. She had always feasted upon flattery but now she reveled in it. She threw herself into a life of feverish emotion, became cynical, disdainful, and thought of nothing but her miserable ambition.

Local coloring came to be an absolute mania with her. She was always prating of "atmosphere" and "realism." One can stand a lot of infernal nonsense from a pretty woman, but really poor Violet often grew actually tiresome with her endless rhapsodies about "the divinity of realism."

It was just after publishing her second novel, a combination of ingenuity and wickedness, a smartish, brackish story you wouldn't have liked your sister to write, that the girl decided to go to the far west in search of "local color" for the next attempt.

"Yes," she drawled, with the fine lady air of disdain she had assumed since her success, "yes, I am going in search of local color and a hero. I may take a cowboy for the latter—who knows? They tell me those fellows are delightfully original and as breezy as the winds from the Rockies."

She made up her mind she had not been misinformed when, a month later, she met Jack Weatherby.

Weatherby was a child of the plains. He had never been east of the Mississippi and had an infinite contempt for the land of the rising sun. He had hunted for a living; he had been a cowboy and raised as much of a rumpus in mining camps as the next fellow. Now he owned his own ranch and herds; had settled down somewhat and had begun to think he would like a wife and home.

THE HERO OF THE NEXT NOVEL.

He was a handsome fellow, as fiery as the mustang he rode and as tender-hearted as a woman—some women.

His ranch lay in the shadow of the Sangre de Christo range, next to that of the Athertons, where the New York girl was stopping. Its acres stretched to the shadowy foot hills and over them roamed the sleek, well-fed creatures of which he was so proud.

It was two days after her arrival that he saw her first. He had ridden over to see Tom Atherton, the big muscular Englishman, who was his particular crony, and had come down the trail with his customary "Hark" and "Whoop." As though riding the sightless couriers of the air, he dashed up to the little flower garden, spurs and chains jingling, sombrero flapping, and letting out a yell which could have been heard in Denver. And there by the side of pretty Mrs. Atherton, sat a stranger, a vision, an angel. The astonished ranchman blushed and stammered like a school boy as he bowed awkwardly and apologized for his Apache-like descent. Who was this divinity in palest pink, this radiant creature with hair like gold and eyes of heaven's own blue? "My friend, Miss Lingard, from New York," Mrs. Atherton had said. Pshaw! She was a celestial being straight from Paradise.

I have always pitied Weatherby. Never for one moment could I blame him. He was a primitive man with savage instincts lurking in his breast. Brave, loyal, straightforward himself, how could he dream of the treacherous cruel blows one little soft white hand was capable of dealing?

Violet found this sturdy, brawny ranchero a delightful study, and decided he should be the hero of her next novel. His quaint wit and poetic fancies born of the mesas and the mountains, his forcible and often ungrammatical speech were faithfully noted; his emotions were played upon, his heart was probed. And he never dreamed he was being experimented on. He loved this exquisite creature, this dainty, soft, purring beauty, as he loved his life. He coveted her and longed to shut her close to his big, faithful, honest heart.

At last came the night when Violet carried her passion for "atmosphere" and "local coloring" to its climax. They had gone for their customary evening stroll, and had climbed up a lofty butte to a broad ledge of rocks. At their feet yawned the canyon, tremendous, awful, black, save where the moonlight touched the opposite wall with ghostly fingers. Back of them loomed the range like the battlements of a phantom city. Through the pines in the canyon the wind came sighing in mournful cadence. While far, far below sounded the faint rushing of water—the river tumbling and foaming along over its rocky bed.

"What a weird place," cried Violet with a pretty little shudder, "and what a ghost-like night. Why did we never come up here before, Jack? What a scene!"

Weatherby was lying at her feet where he had thrown himself to rest after their climb. He turned his face, white in the moonlight, toward her, and fixing his dusky, unfathomable eyes upon her, said: "I kept this place for this hour. I meant to bring you here when I got my courage to the point where I could say all that is in my heart. Many a time down there," pointing to the ranch lying below, "I have looked up here and thought of the time I would bring you to tell you how I love you."

HE STOOD AS IF TURNED TO STONE.

For one instant Violet felt a queer little thrill. The simple dignity of his declaration almost moved the worldly, cold-blooded girl. Then she thought of her local coloring. "What a situation for my novel," she said to herself; then aloud, gently: "So you really love me, Jack?"

"Love you?" he echoed, passionately, as he rose and sat down beside her. "Violet, look," taking her hand, "my heart lies here in this dear little hand." Then throwing all reserve to the winds, he seized her and kissed her, madly, tempestuously.

She struggled to free herself and at length succeeded. "How dare you?" she demanded; "how dare—"

"How dare I?" he cried. "Why, dearest, I love you—I love you, do you hear? And you, you love me a little, do you not?" He was approaching her again, when she said, contemptuously: "No; not a bit. I have simply been studying you."

He stood as if turned to stone. "Studying me," he said, in a queer voice, "studying—why—why?" he savagely demanded, as he caught her wrist and held it in an iron grip.

"You were so different," she faltered, a bit frightened at his sudden ferocity. "I wanted a new type for my book, you know. I suppose Tom told you I write books—"

An absolutely murderous look swept over Weatherby's face. "No," he said, "no one told me that. So you write books? And you wanted to put me in it—was that it? Answer me, answer me."

"Yes," she murmured, faintly.

"And that was all? You never loved me—never meant to marry me?"

"Why, no, how could I? I am to be married in the fall to a man in New York—"

A snarl like that of an infuriated beast interrupted her. Livid with rage, he sprang toward her. Once again he crushed her, shrinking and trembling, to his breast, then dragged her to the very edge of the canyon, gaping like the bottomless pit to receive them. And as her agonized screams pierced the soft summer night, Weatherby, still holding her against his outraged heart, stepped off.

They found them next day in the bottom of the canyon. Violet's lovely face was past recognition, but on Weatherby's lingered a smile of such awful triumph as would have pleased the arch-fiend himself.—Truth.

The Art of Expression.

Pips, the lawyer, has a profound knowledge of human nature, and is in the habit of weighing cause and effect with nice discrimination. When he has won a case he writes to his client: "I have won the action against A."

But when he has lost the case he writes:

"You have lost your lawsuit with B."
—Fremdenblatt.

A Deadly Poisonous Beeswax.

Wax is a substance secreted by bees that is said to be analogous to the fat of the higher animals. In Patagonia, Terre del Fuego and other portions of southern South America honey is never eaten. In the countries mentioned all beeswax is a livid, whitish blue color, and more poisonous than either strychnine or arsenic.—Chicago Chronicle.

Summer Resort Shortage.

"Dear Fannie," wrote a summer girl, "don't come to this hotel under any consideration. The landlord is the only man here and he is seventy years old and married."

"Dear Jennie," was the reply. "I won't. Our landlord is seventy, but he is a bachelor."—Detroit Free Press.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Hoke Smith Reverses.

Secretary Hoke Smith has rendered an important decision in the case of Danielson, an Indian, who received an allotment under the act of 1887, but to whom a patent was never issued. His father was a white and his mother a halfbreed, and he now wants to relinquish and take up other lands as a homestead. The secretary thinks it a case of collusion for another party to get the allotment under the homestead act, and decides that the Indian is entitled to the land under the allotment act, notwithstanding a former departmental decision in the famous South Dakota case of Black Tomahawk vs. Waldron, and that he cannot relinquish. There is every indication that the relinquishment is but a move to allow another party, who has been contesting the allotment, to cover the land with a homestead entry. The law did not contemplate that there should be any sale or contract to sell within 25 years, and during that time the government is to stand as trustee for the Indian. The Indian is not even supposed to have the right to cut the timber during that period, except as it may be necessary to obtain some for making improvements.

Buying More Land.

The leading stockholders in the Minnesota Gold Mining and Refining Company at Redwood Falls continue to purchase land in and around the present seat of mining operations. The latest tract purchased is a farm of 160 acres from a German farmer residing just north of the mine. The consideration is said to have been $10,000. The parties making the purchase stated to the farmer that the company would not make a report on their clean up until at least $10,000 worth of gold was taken out.

In the meantime operations at the mine are pushed with vigor. The company is not unloading any of its stock here—or even attempting to unload any portion of it. In fact, stock issued for lumber, etc., is being bought up wherever found on the market. A report comes from Kansas City, and one or two Eastern points, that some of the stock has been placed on the market there.

A Large Photograph.

A mammoth photograph of Minneapolis, to be placed aboard the cruiser of Minneapolis, was a happy thought on the part of the committee on presentation. The view is seven feet in length, one of the largest photos ever made. It was taken from exposition tower, showing the city in great shape, with the historic falls of St. Anthony well in the foreground, thus giving prominence to the milling industries. It will, doubtless, be a standing revelation to many wherever the vessel goes, in conveying correct impressions as to growth, which no amount of written descripton could convey. Great difficulty was experienced in making the picture by reason of natural conditions, which have hitherto prevented all efforts to obtain a good general view of the city.

Drowned.

Geo Tileston, president of the Tileston Milling Company, was drowned at St. Cloud. He was at the mill, when his horse took fright at a car on the side track and plunged into the canal. Tileston evidently got tangled in a top buggy in which he was riding. He leaves a wife and three children. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Minneapolis.

Raised Pay Checks.

It was discovered at St. Cloud that a clever forgery has been done by raising Great Northern pay checks. One payable to Nels Sundin for $6.50 was raised to $60.70, and cashed by Mutschler & Schendler; one for $3.75, payable to Wm. M. Ward, was raised to $90.45 and cashed by Wm. Wimmer.

News in Brief.

Hon. A. B. French, member of the last legislature from Le Sueur county, died at Lake Emily, his home. This illness was contracted while in St. Paul.

Hi Rumsey, a man living at Kimball, lost a valuable span of horses and came near losing his own life by riding into a swarm of bees. The horses were literally stung to death and Rumsey lies at his home in a critical condition.

Henry Lenze, of St. Paul, was run over by a fractious horse and received internal injuries. His recovery is doubtful.

Otto Block, of Maine Prairie, was severely crushed between a traction engine and a separator at St. Augusta. His condition is precarious.

The large crop of potatoes around Little Falls has called attention to starch factories, and there is talk of building one there.

A man called Charlie was struck by lightning and instantly killed at Pete Couche's farm, near Kent. He was on his load of grain with a fork over his shoulder waiting his turn to drive to the machine. One horse was killed also.

A suit has been instituted against the Duluth, Red Wing & Southern railroad by Goodhue county to recover the cost of a highway bridge which was washed away in a recent heavy rain, on account of a change in a water course caused by the road's grade.

W. H. Norway had four stacks of oats struck by lightning and burned upon his farm in Marchan, near Hastings.

A farmer named Ohman, from Brockway, was in St. Cloud recently looking for his daughter Anna, who had married a young man named Chas. Loudon, against her parent's wishes. Ohman claimed that his unacceptable son-in-law had hid the bride. The son-in-law admitted this to a friend and said he proposed to keep her whereabouts a secret until her parents got into a more forgiving mood.

Increasing iron ore trade has made it imperitively necessary for the Duluth, Mesaba & Northern railway to erect another ore dock at Duluth and work will begin at once. It will be 1,000 feet long.

James Owens, a brakeman on the St. Paul & Duluth, was thrown under a train at Hinckley and an arm and leg were broken, and he was injured internally. He was taken to Duluth and will probably die.

The Catholics of Morgan will construct a brick church to cost $5,000 in place of the frame church destroyed by lightning two weeks ago.

Lightning struck the house of Henry Kelke at Wood Lake, burning it to the ground. It also struck Wix Treadway while riding his bicycle, prostrating him to the ground, but inflicting light injury.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Almond Frosting: Almond frosting makes a delicious addition to a loaf of white cake. Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth, stir in half a pound of powdered sugar and a quarter of a pound of almonds, blanched and powdered to a paste. Flavor with orange flower water, and, if you choose, a few drops of almond extract.—Boston Budget.

—Almond Blanc Mange (French recipe): Blanch and pound ten ounces of sweet and half an ounce of bitter almonds, add four ounces of powdered sugar and work to a paste, pour over a pint and a half of boiling water, cover and set aside for an hour. Strain and mix with two ounces of dissolved gelatine, then pour in a mold and set on ice. When firm turn out, and serve with whipped cream flavored with a few drops of extract of almond.—Farm and Fireside.

—Potato Salad: Slice some cold boiled potatoes, toss them lightly in oil and vinegar and dish sprinkled with finely-chopped shallot or chives. Filleted red herring kippers, or kippered or smoked salmon can all be added to this salad. Slice some cold new potatoes, and arrange them with quartered hard-boiled eggs, sliced beetroot and stoned olives. Prepare a sauce by well mixing one part vinegar to two of best oil, pepper, salt and minced parsley, chives and capers; pour this all over the salad and serve.—Household News.

—Breakfast Dish: Procure an ox cheek, cleanse it well in salted cold water, and then let it soak. Place it in a stewpan, cover with cold water, bring to the boil, and skim thoroughly. Add sufficient whole black pepper, salt, allspice and a blade of mace to season it. Simmer very gently for three and a half or four hours, according to the size of the cheek. Line a greased basin with slices of hard-boiled egg. Cut the meat into small pieces, and fill the basin two-thirds full with it. Strain some of the liquor carefully through a cloth, dissolve a little gelatine in it, flavor with tarragon or plain vinegar, and pour into the basin so as to fill it up. Next day turn out and serve with a good garnish. Cut it into thin slices when helping.—Leeds Mercury.

—Preserved Gooseberries (green): Top and stem the gooseberries, wash in cold water and drain. To every pound of gooseberries allow one and one-quarter pounds of sugar and one and one-half pints water. Throw the gooseberries into a porcelain-lined kettle, cover with boiling water and stand aside a few moments to scald. Put the sugar and water in another kettle to boil. As soon as it boils skim and stand aside to cool. When the gooseberries feel tender take them out carefully with a perforated skimmer and slide them carefully into a pan of cold water. Let stand a few minutes, then lift them again with the skimmer and put them carefully into the sirup. Stand over a gentle fire and let simmer slowly for about twenty minutes or until they are quite clear. If the gooseberries seem likely to break take them out carefully and allow the sirup to boil a few minutes longer. When done put carefully into jars or tumblers and stand aside to cool. When cold tie up and put away. —Mrs. Rorer, in Orange Judd Farmer.

FOR SUN-BURNED CHEEKS.

What May Be Done to Lessen Their Unbecoming Color.

It is a little hard to "dress up" in the evening, when nothing seems to suit the sun-burned face and hands so well as the negligee outing costume we wear daily, which, by the way, should be navy blue or dark green; but suppose we have a secret talk together, my blue-eyed maids, before it is time to appear at the tea table, and see if things can not be bettered a little?

First, let me tell you, before you go on a water excursion, to thoroughly bathe both face, neck and hands with any pure cold cream, an excellent preparation for warding off and removing sunburn, that can be bought at any druggist's. Then when you enter your room all heated and tired on your arrival home, first take a sponge bath, and after it fill a deep basin with lukewarm water, and into it boldly plunge your face, holding your breath and closing your eyes. Keep it there as long as possible without breathing, then "come to the surface," take a deep breath and try it again, repeating the process a number of times. Gently dab your face dry with a soft towel, afterward sponging it lightly with alcohol, and sit, or, what is better, lie down and rest half an hour or longer.

At the end of that time you will find your color will have perceptibly diminished, and a little baby powder deftly applied will remove the shiny appearance and tone down the overredness effectively. On retiring for the night bathe the face, neck and arms again, and apply the cold cream as before directed.—Jenness Miller's Monthly.

Refreshing Sleep.

Sunlight is good for everything but feathers.

Away with heavy hangings, either above or below the bed.

Beware of a dusty, musty carpet, says Good Housekeeping; better sweetness and a bare floor.

Do not fail to provide some means for ventilation during the night.

Keep the head cool while sleeping, but do not by a draught of cold air falling upon it.

If a folding bed must be used, contrive some way to keep it aired and wholesome.

Let the pillow be high enough to bring the head in a natural position; no more no less.

Thoroughly air the sleeping room every day; air the beds and bedding as often as possible.

A dark, out-of-the-way, unwholesome corner is no more fitted for a sleeping room than for a parlor.

A feather bed which has done service for a generation or two is hardly a desirable thing upon which to sleep.—Detroit Free Press.

Frizzled Celery.

Celery properly curled is one of the most ornamental garnishes to chicken salad or any salad of fish or cold meat. Take the pure white part of a bunch of celery. Pare off the root, which makes a delicious salad, and cut away all the green leaves. Cut the stalk into pieces about three inches long and with a small, sharp-bladed penknife slit each stalk six or seven times, leaving about three-quarters of an inch uncut. Lay these pieces in ice water for two hours.—N. Y. Tribune

ABOUT THE TONGUE.

It Is an Indicator of the State of the Health.

The tongue is of great diagnostic value, and by close observation it will give us valuable aid in determining the character of disease. The tongue tells of the condition of the blood, the condition of the nervous system, and the functions of nutrition and excretion. As these are important things to know, in fact, just what we want to know, we will make the tongue talk as plainly as possible. We find the expression of disease in its form, its condition of dryness or moisture, its coatings and colors. Change in form is expressive of disease. The elongated and pointed tongue indicates a condition of irritation and determination of blood to the stomach and bowels, and it is safe to give it full weight, and be careful in the administration of remedies.

As it is associated with excitation of the nerve centers, this evidence is valuable with reference to the stomach and bowels. If we observe this change of form at first, we not only anticipate the unpleasant gastric irritation during the sickness, but it puts us on our guard against using anything that will irritate the stomach and bowels. The full tongue, broad and thick, is evidence of atony, want of action in the digestive tract. Then the stomach will bear cathartics in mild form without danger. The dry, pinched tongue expresses a want of functional activity in the digestive organs. It is the tongue of acute disease, and is usually associated with dryness. While it is one of the indications for food, we must be careful in its selection, giving small quantities at a time, and in a warm liquid form.

The fissured tongue in chronic diseases indicates inflammatory action of the kidneys. The fissured tongue in advanced stages of acute diseases refers us to lesions of the kidneys, or irritation of the nerve centers. In many cases we find a wrong in the secretion of urine. It deserves close attention and means to put the skin in better condition, and allay irritation of the nerve centers. Dryness and moisture are important evidence of the condition of the digestive organs. If the tongue is dry, we are sure the stomach and intestines can do but little digestive work. It is absurd to employ cathartics in such cases, unless the object is simply to remove irritating matter. In acute disease, with dryness of tongue, when we find it becoming moist, we are confident of improvement, and it is nearly always looked on as a favorable symptom.

The thin, transparent coating of the tongue gives evidence of enfeebled digestion, frequently from intemperate eating and drinking.

A heavily-loaded tongue at the base calls attention to accumulations in the stomach, and suggests the use of an emetic. The broad, pallid tongue gives evidence of a want of the alkaline elements of the blood. It may be the basis of the entirety of the disease, which will fade away as soon as the proper alkali is given, or it may be but a portion of the wrong, and the alkaline salt prepares the way and facilitates the action of other remedies. The deep red tongue, generally dry, indicates an acid. A dirty white or dirty gray tongue means antiseptics.

While dryness always indicates excitement of the nerve centers and calls for sedatives, too much moisture and relaxation is evidence of the opposite condition.—Herald of Health.

CHURCH ALES,

And Beer, According to This Authority, Are Unwholesome.

It would be easy to cite countless lyrics in praise of ale from the days of the jovial author of "I love no roast, but a nut-brown toast," etc., with its stirring chorus, down to the days of the bard who "liked a drop of good beer," and denounced those who would "rob a poor man" of his treasure; but these ditties, like the songs of modern German students, can not be reckoned among the testimonies of the sober portion of the community. The reckless chorale of the singer who only wished for "good ale enough, whether it be new or old," savors of the revels which overpass the limits of "honest mirth." But to modern temperance ideas it is somewhat surprising to come upon an inscription like the following on a church gallery, as actually occurs at Sygate, in Norfolk:

"God speed the plough
And give us good ale enow * *
Be merry and glade
With good ale was this work made.

"Church ales" and "Whitsun ales" were ancient substitutes for poor rates. The church wardens bought, or received as a gift, quantities of malt, which they brewed into ale, and sold for the benefit of the poor of the parish, a kind of a festival, often accompanied by a fair, being held on these occasions. Audrey mentions this custom as continuing to his grandfather's time, and speaks approvingly of it, remarking that, in his own parish, "there were no poor rates; the Whitsun ale did the business. * * * All things (at the festival) were civil and without scandal." The abuse of such festivities is often denounced, but the most sober and religious persons of the vicinity never appear to have objected to the fact of the brewing and sale of beer. Even the Puritans of the seventeenth century had no special quarrel with the beverages vended on these occasions; they merely denounced "church ales" in the same company with May poles, stage plays and all other amusements. Prynne himself was certainly no abstainer; when he records that, during his imprisonment, he took few regular meals, "rarely dined," but every three or four hours "munched a manchet and refreshed his exhausted spirits" with a sup of ale brought by his servant. In 1620 a consultation of physicians at Paris were told by one of their number "that the English have a drink called ale, which is the wholesomest liquor which can be drank. * * * * While the Englishman drank only ale, they were strong and brave men, but when they fell to wine they greatly decreased in strength. The altered habits of modern life, with its more sedentary pursuits, and its substitution of indoor for outdoor occupations, have modified the medical view regarding "wholesomeness" of beer. Like fat bacon, it is not readily assimilated by modern brainworkers.—London Standard.

NO COUNTRY FOR CHILLS.

The Shaking Residents Wanted Everything But Quinine.

The colonel suggested that I take along a package of quinine in my ride through the swamp country, as the towns were far apart and the drug beyond the reach of many settlers. At nine o'clock in the morning I reached a cabin, to find the owner and his wife and three children sitting out in the sun. All had blue lips and haggard faces and all were shivering with a chill. I told the man I would leave him some quinine, and was about to undo the package when he stopped me with a gesture and said:

"Stranger, we ain't chillin' fur shucks, but thar' is them beyand us that ar'. Leave me a plug of terbacker and save yer kee-nine fur wusser cases."

On the door-step of the next cabin sat a lone man. He was trying to scrape the bark off a sassafras root, but he shook and shivered so hard that he could make no progress. I told him I had some quinine as a free gift, but he held up his shaking hands and replied:

"Stranger, this hain't no chillin' to be cured by kee-nine, but is jist narvousness for the want of a sip of whisky. You'll find chillin' further down the road."

I gave him a sip from my flask, and at the next cabin found a woman and two children on the bed and two more children on the floor. The woman sat up in bed and shivered and shook and clicked her teeth together, and as I explained the object of my call she replied:

"Powerful kind o' yo', stranger, but thar' is them as needs it further on."

"But haven't you chills and fever?"

"Wall, sorter, but nuthin' to brag of. I reckon the most that ails me is the want of snuff. If you'll be so kind as to leave me a pinch or two I'd be mighty peart in an hour or so."

During the day's ride of twenty-five miles I dispensed whisky, snuff, tobacco and pipes several times over, but no quinine. At the last cabin before I reached Marion I found a man stretched out on the bed and tied fast. His hands were as cold as ice, his lips as blue as if painted, and his shakes not only shook the bed but the whole cabin as well.

"Tied he 'un on so he 'un couldn't shake off," explained his wife.

"I see. He has it pretty bad. I will leave all this quinine with you, and it ought to cure him in a week or two."

"Kee-nine! What's that fur?"

"To cure chills and fever. I'll fix a dose for him at once."

"Stranger, don't bother," she said as I began at the package.

"But he wants to be cured?"

"Yes, reckon he does; but don't bother with that kee-nine. If yo'd got a drop o' whisky an' a plug of terbacker an' some powder an' shot, yo' can make Sam as peart as a butterfly by to-morrow. 'Tain't ager as ails him, but it's bein' discouraiged kase coons is thick around yere and every dawggone varmint kin climb faster an' higher'n he kin.—M. Quad, in Detroit Free Press.

Carried It With Him.

During a pedestrian trip a gentleman came unexpectedly upon a country race-course, and on one portion of the ground found a thimblerig establishment in full work. Notwithstanding the remonstrances of his companions, the gentleman insisted on watching the game. "Now, would the gent like to wager a crown he could find the pea?" remarked the expert. "Yes," was the reply. The money was on both sides deposited; and the pedestrian lifting up the thimble, pointed out the required pea and took the stakes. A second and a third bet ended to the surprise of the expert; then a wager of two pounds to nothing steadied the nerves of the loser, and the trick was accomplished with great caution. The gentleman lifted up the thimble, pointed out the pea, and pocketed the stakes. "S'help me! I didn't put it there!" exclaimed the bewildered artist. "No; but I always carry my own pea," rejoined the man. —Texas Siftings.

In No Hurry.

"I think I'd like some corned beef and cabbage," said the freckled-faced young man. "I got some here the other day and it was pretty good."

"Very sorry, sir," answered the waiter, "but we haven't any corned beef to-day."

"You've got beef, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, corn some, darn it! I ain't in any hurry. I'll wait."—Chicago Tribune.

The Onward March

of Consumption is stopped short by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If you haven't waited beyond reason, there's complete recovery and cure.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

DELANO DIARY

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—Delano has traded her old hand fire engine for a new hook and ladder outfit.

—Rumor has it that a majority of the village fathers contemplate removing from our village.

—To-morrow will be fair day. It is expected that this will be one of the largest fairs of the season.

—Conzet Darrow & Son have just received a large amount of stock feed just fresh from the factory.

—The total eclipse of the moon occurred Tuesday evening and was witnessed by quite a number of our citizens.

—J. W. Lindsley is laying a new artificial stone sidewalk in front of his property on R. R. Ave. He has stone curbing and his corner now assumes real metropolitan airs.

—With as fine a system of waterworks as our village affords it is a pity that the streets can't be sprinkled on such windy days as Tuesday was. There is no use of having everything saturated with dust when a few minutes work with a hose would settle it.

—If it is true, as some claim, that no saloon keeper in town violates the law by selling to old drunkards, how does it happen that there are so manny old drunkards? Whoever is guilty of furnishing them with liquors should be found out and given the full extent of the law.

—Frank Barnek: aged 23 years living at Watertown, met with a frightful accident an Monday, resulting in his death. He undertook to steer a traction engine and the seat broke letting him down onto the ground where the engine ran over him and killed him at once. He was one of Watertown's most exemplary young men and will be sadly missed.

—If some of our farmer friends were met when they come to the iron bridge or when they get off their wagons to uncheck their teams to allow them to drink at the Delano watering troughs and a dime demanded to help pay the cost, or the runing expenses of the same, they would make a great fuss about it. And yet they will deposit many dimes in a saloon and get in return what hurts them and pay for the whole of Delano's improvements, and not complain.

—The village council on Friday evening discussed at length, the subject of what to do with a man who through the influence of intoxicating liquors has been brought to a helpless condition. They are afraid he will, as soon as cold weather comes on, become a village charge: and they wish by sending him to some institution, to prevent such a calamity. But a few weeks since annother man, after being jeered at on the streets for weeks, was sent to the Asylum for insane. No wonder Delano's population don't increase. Decent people have seen enough. It is about time to strike at the root of evil. If our village council would see that the contracts made with vendors of intoxicants were strictly lived up to; that saloons were run according to the present law, there would be fewer of these kind of cases to deal with. It certainly is no credit to a village the size of this to have such a crop of men made useless to soceity and to their families as Delano has, and the City Fathers should do their duty in the matter, rather than wait and then send off the poor victims, after their money is gone, their minds and bodies shattered, to die in an insane asylum, soldiers home or other state institution.

—Charley Carlton decorated the "Senate" in red this week.

—If the police will pay more attention to seeing that the laws governing the sale of intoxicating liquors are kept they will have less trouble with disturbers of the peace on Fairday.

—For Rent 40 acres of land inquire of C. M. Conzet or at the Danforth House. If you can't rent the farm you can get a good meal for 25cts.

—Big furniture cars with a capacity of 60,000 pounds are being used for hauling wheat to the cities over the G. N. line. 1,000 bushels of wheat is quite a load, several of these have been shipped from here this week making room for more in the elevator.

—The citizens living on "rookery row" complain that the lengthy petition presented to the village council last Friday evening has not been given the proper attention, and the piles of hitching posts are still on the sidewalk, instead of being set where they belong.

—Delano is getting quite tony with her imported cement sidewalks. Why can't these high protectionists be satisfied without paying tariff on their sidewalks? The tariff on Portland cement is 8 cents per hundred pounds including weight of barrel or package, and comes from Europe.

—The winter term of the Delano High School will begin Monday Sept. 9. Let every pupil who intends attending this term be on hand promptly and get a good start with their classes. A good corps of teachers have been selected and it is expected that the school will make progress toward a first grade high school.

—George Schaffer, of Vicksburg, who is visiting with his relatives in Delano, celebrated his twenty first anniversary of his birth yesterday. Some of the members of the old brass band tried hard to get enough of the boys together to make a little music for the occasion but finally gave it up. The band ought, now, that some of the discords have been dispensed with, harmonize and practice up. There is no reason now for not having a good band in town once more.

—The new grade on Third Street is nothing like so convinent for property holders as was the grade made by Mr. Cooley, of Minneapolis years ago, and which through negligence or willfulness of someone, has disappeared. A town as beautifully located as is Delano, out not to be spoiled by flatting its streets to ruin the lots. An easy and as nearly natural grade as is possible is better for the looks of that portion of town. People have built houses or made other improvments in accordance with the old grade, are now obliged to look up to see the street. The next council may find it convenient to reestablish the old grade, and then every thing would be wrong again. It is better to follow a proper grade from the first.

County Cullings.

The north side of the county are enjoying a melon feast at present. In Buffalo musk melons are sold for 25cts per bushel, and fair sized water melons two for a nickle.

The county commissioners have authorized the County Attorney if he thinks the judgment rendered in the Mill Creek bridge matter unwarranted that he take an appeal to the Supreme Court.

The Wrigh county Agricultural Society will hold its 27th Annual Fair, at Howard Lake on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, Sept. 24th, 25th, and 26th. This should be looked forward to as a grand exhibition of the products of every line of business in the county.

Several of Buffalo's citizens are taking vacations of greater or less length this week. J. H. Wendell has gone to Dakota to get out of the crowd. A. Y. Eaton took a trip to Annandale, Thursday. W. E. Culkin is visiting his sick mother in New York State, while Billy Cochrane is nursing a sick eye.

The Journal this week with commendable enterprise publishes the names of the entire population of Buffalo and claims an increase of 35 names since the census taken in June, and 17 more than Delano. Perhaps Delano might, if anyone would take the trouble to count the people show as great an increase in population. If not we will be obliged to hereafter call the County Seat the metropolis.

The Court House and grounds, at Buffalo are the pride of Wright County citizens whenever they visit them. But this dry weather is begining to tell on the grass and shrubbery. The County Commissioners should at once provide a system of waterworks sufficient to keep at least a couple of small portable fountains in operation all the time. It need not be very expensive and would add 50 per cent to the appearancee of things in dry weather. A good sized tank located in the upper part of the building or even on a level with the pump on the premises would furnish sufficient head for watering most of the grounds. While they are at it they might make it elaborate enough for use in case of fire, and maybe they could save enough on insurance to pay for the outfit and expense of runing it.

Among Our Exchanges.

A threshing outfit operated by John Karpen, of Granby, was distroyed by fire last week while at work in the town of Bernadotte. This we believe is the fifth machine to go up in smoke in this country this year.—St. Peter Herald.

The smoothness with which the old political machines are running in the states where there are elections this fall, is only another indication of the revival of business. The Brices and the Gormans and the Quays have evidently been keeping them well lubricated.—Sherburne County Star News.

Adolph Blockk of Fair Haven Township met with a fatal accident a few days since. While attempting to ascend a hill with his engine and separator the sand so retarded his progress that he attempted to back the machine in order to get better motion. The separator stuck in the sand and as the engine backed he was caught between them and so seriously injured that he died about twenty six hours later.—Annandale Post.

The Waverly Tribune says that "Every cent of taxes collected this year should be expended on the objects for which it was levied." The Tribune is correct. This having a ballance of from $10,000 to $20,000 in the banks all the time, a custom which has prevailed in Wright county for several years, is all wrong. It is a good deal better for it to be used in building bridges, making new roads and old roads better. We believe in keeeing up the credit of the county, paying up all bills promptly, but we don't believe it is good business to have a very large surplus on hand for the sole benefit of the money lending class.—Wright County Times.

HINTS.

Don't worry and fret as you go thro' life,
When things don't come your way;
For it does no good in this world of strife
And you'll find it out some day.
Don't get discouraged every time
Adversity may frown;
For the hill you find so hard to climb
Will be easy going down.

Don't pick at the faults along the road,
With never a word to say
That will send some heart with its merry load,
Lighter on its way;
But make your aim and endeavor kind,
And ever a good word lend;
For maybe some day you will find
You'll want just such a friend.

When the road grows rough and storms betide,
And clouds obscure the sky,
Don't snap and snarl and at Fate chide,
And say, "No use to try;"
But bend to your task and strive again:
O'ercome and down despair,
And you'll get to the top and find that then
Success will meet you there.

Make all your deeds of good intent,
And wear a pleasant smile;
Speak words of kindness and content,
Tho' your heart be sad the while
You'll find it's best and will always pay
To make some path more bright;
And you'll find in the end it's the only way
To make your own load light.

—DON WHITNEY.

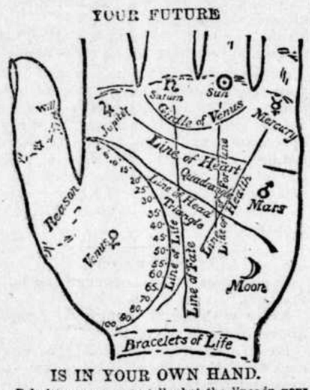
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

MOST of the gatherings of old soldiers recently held in Minneapolis, elected committees to confer with the committees elected by similar bodies to arrange to hold the reunions of all Minnesota regiments at the same time and place, hereafter. Many regiments have so few representatives at their meetings of late years as to call for this action.

EVEN among participants in the battle of Birch Coulie there seems to be a disagreement as to who commanded during the fight. Maj. Joseph R. Brown and Capt. Grant both have friends advocating their right to the honor. It looks as if such a thing should be easily settled. As for locating the monument the battle ground is considered the proper place. Correct.

THE Catholic Seminary built by Archbishop Ireland, at St. Paul, and to which James J. Hill contributed was dedicated last week with more than usual pomp and display. Educational institutions, where the rising generation can receive a through training is one of the safeguards of American libertv, Twin Cities seem destined to be the Athens of the North-West.

A Family Splitter.

There is, perhaps, no greater source of family jars, and discords and actual breaking ups than that furnished by the poorly prepared meal.

No stomach is strong enough, however great the love of its possessor may be for she that prepares the meals, to take the place, everlastingly, of her lack of culinary knowledge, or failure to prepare, in a proper manner, the daily food.

Many a happy young family with a long, pleasant, and beautiful life before them, have been shipwrecked on this prominent, dangerous and well known bowlder in life's sea: have become discouraged, at the very outset, and labored, through the balance of its career in a dissatisfied manner. Poor coffee, flat biscuit, soggy potatoes, rancid butter, or heavy pie, and indigestible cake are to blame for many a sour stomach, sick headache, or other illness: as well as for cross and sour dispositions and angry words and quarrels and fights. Some men with stomach upset by poorly cooked victuals crave something stronger, and make this an excuse for resorting to the dram shop, and daily finding the same thing occurring become confirmed sots. Young people get away from home and learn how others live and conclude to remain elsewhere than beneath the old home roof, and amdst indigestible fools and incompatible tempers.

Every good housewife knows the effect of an uncommonly good meal on the temper of her spouse; and when any particular favor is to be asked is in the habit, often, of using that argument effectively.

Some men in every community are known as grouty, petulant, cross or odd. They go along the street without a word of recognition for those they meet; no pleasant goodiay escapes their lips. If you go into their place of business you are answered only in monotones, and made to feel that your absence would be far better appreciated than is your presence. Usually indigestion is a trouble with them; their food is not promptly turned into chyle; it is not assimilated and changed into good, rich, healthy blood with all its invigorating and life giving qualities; but in an undigested condition acts as an irritant to the system generally. And the irritated system causes the individual to become a source of unpleasantness to those about him until the whole community feels the effects of the poor digestion.

Men should provide plenty of good food; a good stove to cook it; wood in sufficient quantity and of proper quality, and abundance of pure water; and the wife and mother should know how and faithfuliy see to it that all meals are served to the best advantage from a sanatary point of view. And then will there be far less grumbling and hard feelings in families, and in communities. By all means let mothers learn their daughters to cook well and so far as they can to abolish this family splitter. Let us have good cooking.

A Few Fair Day Follies.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—Dear Sir; may I be permitted through your columns to mention two incidents which came under my notice last Fair day.

(1) A man cruelly beating two dumb oxen; apparently without any provocation.

(2) A man in a helpless condition trying for a long time to hitch his horses to his wagon, and then trying to drive away. After travelling some distance he turned back, presumably to the place where he became helpless. I may as well say the man appeared to be drunk. The horses started for home by themselves, being doubtless, hungry and thursty with waiting outside all day; jolted one calf out of the wagon, breaking its neck, and the last I heard of them was from a person who saw them going at a furious pace along the Rockford road.

Now Sir, such incidents, and are they not of frequent occurrence? need no comment from me, yet I cannot help protesting in the name of humanity and decency against such things. They are a disgrace to any civilized community and disfigure our village every Fair day and oftener.

The law forbids profane and obscene language I believe, and people who use it to the disgust of passers by should be stopped. If they must get drunk they ought to be locked up; the law forbids drunken people being loose in the streets.

I only express the complaints I hear on every side. Ladies dare not go along River Street on Fair day, or any one who respects himself and dislikes vile language and cruelty and drunkenness; nor is it safe to drive in the outskirts of the village for fear of runaway horses; or horses in charge of drunken drivers. They should be kept till they are sober, for the public safety. Then there is the cruelty of leaving horses tied up all day without water, which frequently happens.

There should be a remedy for these evils. At present it may do some good to give them publicity, which I thank you for doing. I remain, Yours truly,
TABOR DAVIES.

Mc Gary Some More.

INDEPENDENCE, Minn., Sept. 10, '95.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—For one who is a farmer depending upon Mother Earth and Providence for a living must say considering all things I am quite happy, and would be more so were all mankind blessed with food, raiment and the comforts of this life. But thousands of our people are on the ragged edge of poverty, and know not where they will get food and shelter for the coming winter.

I think we are much in need of a new code of laws that will not allow so much latitude between the Jew and the Gentile; for we all are of one flesh, but not of the same house.

The Jews are the bankers of the world: and the money lords are our taskmasters. But Paul says: "These light afflictions worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory." But sometimes it is hard to look upon these things with good grace, and then shout Epluribus Unum (one composed of many.)

The leading Press (them that are bought up) of the country; and the full fledged politicians: groomed, and dressed in the royal robe of authority are now telling us how we should vote in order to preserve our free institutions and save this country from bankruptcy, but at the same time they mean for you to vote so as to save their party; but a political party is no legal organization, authorized by the laws of our country; neither have the political tricksters a patent upon the rights and privileges of these fellows; but we are free and independent citizens; free to act our own pleasure so long as we keep within the limits of the law. "We need a little higher protection on wheat and potatoes in order that the farmer may get a better price for said produce." Such talk about protection is perfectly outlandish; sounds like the voice of a heathen, and is enough to make an intelligent farmer throw up his last meal

It is so dry and hot everybody is wishing for rain. Plowing is getting to be almost an impossibility in places.

James Turnham, our genial merchant, went to Minneapolis last evening on business and to take in the fair.

Mr. S. Muffley, Ex-County Superintendent of Schools, of Wright County, was in our town yesterday on business.

George Phillips and wife, of Minnetonka, are visiting friends and relatives in our town this week.

Farmers are cutting corn, plowing and wishing for rain.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Sept. 6, 1895

Who willl be the democratic candidate next year? That question is asked of every prominent democrat who comes to Washington these days, for the talk of nominating President Cleveland for a third term is considered meaningless by most Democrats. The three men who are oftenest named sor that honor are ex-Secretary Whitney, of New York, Secretary Carlisle, of Kentucky, and Hon. William R. Morrison, of Ill., either of whom would make a good candidate and a goood President. Other gentlemen are named, but those three are named oftenest and many name them all and say that one of the three will be nominated. Representative Tucker, of Va., who was in Washington this week, named two of them in expressing his opinion. He said: "We are going to nominate one of the two men for the Presidency. It will be either Carlisle or Morrison. The silver men will probably oppose Carlisle more determinedly than they would Morrison. He will be stronger in the east, however, and the fact that he is a southern man will be enough to give him the sentiment of that section. I suppose the west will be more favorable to Morrison and that the silver men would be better satisfied with him."

Secretary Morton has not a very high opinion of the business sense displayed in some of the legislation of the last Congress, as he has shown by his refusal to spend $168,000 appropriated to buy seeds for free distribution. He this week cited another instance of bad business legislation. Congress authorized a new edition of what is popularly known as the "Horse Book". These books will cost the government about 60 cents each, and Secretary Morton says the same quantity could have been bought from the dealers in government publications, who buy largely from Congressmen for 40 cents each. Secretary Morton is not alone in thinking such legislation unbusinesslike.

The Democratic Congressional Committee does not as a rule take part in strictly state campaigns, but the campaign in Utah, which will send two U. S. Senators and one R presentative to Congress, has been made an exception, and the committee has been aiding the Utah democrats in every way possible. In view of the vote at the last territorial election—republican 21,000, democrat 19,000, and populist 500—neither party has any reason to feel overconfident of the result of the present campaign. The only thing absolutely certain about Utah is that one of the new Senators will be a Gentile and one a Mormon. The Congressional delegation will be for silver because it would be impossible for either party to elect any other, and the leaders of both parties have agreed about the Senators.

Secretary Herbert has given Admiral Kirkland a sharp official reprimand for a bit of flunkeyism which he was guilty of during the celebration attending the opening of the North Sea and Baltic canal. When the Admiral, his staff, and the officers of the cruiser New York were all drawn up on the bridge of that vessel to receive a visit from Emperor William, Admiral Kirkland noticed that Rev. H. H. Clark, chaplain of the New York, wore his ordinary clerical garments. He directed Capt. Evans (fighting Bob), commander of the vessel to order the chaplain to go below because he was not in special full dress uniform. Capt. Evans demurred on the ground that the chaplain had on the only dress provided for him by the naval regulations, and that being an officer he was entitled to the right of remaining on the bridge. Admiral Kirkland thereupon gave Capt. Evans a pernatory order to send the chaplain below and of course, Capt. Evans was obliged to obey his superior officer. Chaplain Clark made a complaint to the Department, forwarding a full statement of the affair, accompanied by one from Capt. Evans, and Admiral Kirkland also made a statement.

General Coppinger, who is now in Washington, says that neither the Wyoming settlers nor the Bannock Indians were to blame for the Jackson Hole Indian troubles, but that the migratory class known as "Rustlers" were at the bottom of the whole business. General Coppinger favors annexing the Jackson Hole region to the Yellowstone National Park, but in view of the probable opposition from Wyoming it is not probable that Secretary Lamont will make such a recommendation to Cyngress.

Plant Trees.

We concur with a writer in one of our exchanges who says:

Farmers through the United States are making a mistake when they fail to plant trees on their land not suited to crops, and along their lains, fences and highways. Without any other expense than that of planting the young trees they could provide for fine rows of maple, oak, pine, birch, hickory, walnut, and other trees on their farms, all of which would be increasing in value every year. Again, they might plant fruit trees and thus secure abundance of cherries, peaches, apples, plums, and other fruits. In some of the older parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania the farms are crossed, recrossed, and bounded by rows of cherry and other fruit trees, and the owners look upon these as remunerative and almost indispensable.—Scientific American.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

Labor Saving Machinery.

The Detroit Free Press: "It is well known how ingenious machinery has well-nigh revolutionized the once intricate work of the carpenter, leaving only the simplest part of the trade for manual labor. Never was this innovation of patented devices more marked than between 1880 and 1890, yet there were 53,547 carpenters in the United States in the former year, while there were 140,621 in 1890, and the average wages of the latter were $675 as against $456 for those who had far less machinery to contest with. Between the same years great strides were made in the moulding and handling of brick by machinery, yet the number of workmen doubled while the number of yards was slightly increased, and the wages advanced from an annual average of $228 to $300. In few industries has the saving of labor by machinery been more marked than in the manufacture of furniture, and the cheapening of the product has been simply amazing; yet the number of men employed in it increased from 55,304 in 1880 to 92,304 in 1890, wages advancing from an average of $423 to $527. This line of evidence might be pursued throughout the list of industries where, for any considerable time machinery has been doing the work of brains and hands. The conclusion forced is that the introduction of labor-saving machinery is not to reduce permanently the number of employes, but simply to readjust the working force and insure higher wages."—Scientific American.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
Square Type.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of over 1634 x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by de Longpre, the most celebrated of living flower painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1-15. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the fairer sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and you will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put you in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of the whole family.

ARE YOU READY FOR THE SHOW?

Are you all a-getting ready for the show down South,
Where the melon's ripe and juicy, and is melting in your mouth?
Have you packed your trunks, believers? Don't you hear the whistle blow?
Are you ready—are you ready for the Great Big Show?

Are you all a-getting ready for the show 'way down
Where the peach is reelin' rosy and the 'possum's bakin' brown?
Have you bought your tickets, people? Don't you hear the whistle blow?
All the bells are ringing, ringing at the Great Big Show?

Are you all a-getting ready for the show? Sing! Sing
A hearty hallelujah, while the bells melodious ring!
Have you sent 'em word you're coming? Don't you hear the whistle blow?
The country's just a-humming at the Great Big Show?

Come on, ye saints and sinners,, on the sea and on the land—
"From Greenland's icy mountains, from India's coral strand!"
Come on! The bands are playing! Don't you hear the whistle blow?
Oh, you'd better get your ticket for the Great Big Show?

MOST of the gatherings of old soldiers recently held in Minneapolis, elected committees to confer with the committees elected by similar bodies to arrange to hold the reunions of all Minnesota regiments at the same time and place, hereafter. Many regiments have so few representatives at their meetings of late years as to call for this action.

EVEN among participants in the battle of Birch Coulie there seems to be a disagreement as to who commanded during the fight. Maj. Joseph R. Brown and Capt. Grant both have friends advocating their right to the honor. It looks as if such a thing should be easily settled. As for locating the monument the battle ground is considered the proper place. Correct.

THE Catholic Seminary built by Archbishop Ireland, at St. Paul, and to which James J. Hill contributed was dedicated last week with more than usual pomp and display. Educational institutions, where the rising generation can receive a through training is one of the safeguards of American liberty, Twin Cities seem destined to be the Athens of the North-West.

A Family Splitter.

There is, perhaps, no greater source of family jars, and discords and actual breaking ups than that furnished by the poorly prepared meal.

No stomach is strong enough, however great the love of its possessor may be for she that prepares the meals, to take the place, everlastingly, of her lack of culinary knowledge, or failure to prepare, in a proper manner, the daily food.

Many a happy young family with a long, pleasant, and beautiful life before them, have been shipwrecked on this prominent, dangerous and well known bowlder in life's sea; have become discouraged, at the very outset, and labored, through the balance of its career in a dissatisfied manner. Poor coffee, flat biscuit, soggy potatoes, rancid butter, or heavy pie, and indigestible cake are to blame for many a sour stomach, sick headache, or other illness: as well as for cross and sour dispositions and angry words and quarrels and fights. Some men with stomach upset by poorly cooked victuals crave something stronger, and make this an excuse for resorting to the dram shop, and daily finding the same thing occurring become confirmed sots. Young people get away from home and learn how others live and conclude to remain elsewhere than beneath the old home roof, and amidst indigestible foods and incompatible tempers.

Every good housewife knows the effect of an uncommonly good meal on the temper of her spouse; and when any particular favor is to be asked is in the habit, often, of using that argument effectively.

Some men in every community are known as grouty, petulant, cross or odd. They go along the street without a word of recognition for those they meet; no pleasant goodday escapes their lips. If you go into their place of business you are answered only in monotones, and made to feel that your absence would be far better appreciated than is your presence. Usually indigestion is a trouble with them; their food is not promptly turned into chyle; it is not assimilated and changed into good, rich, healthy blood with all its invigorating and life giving qualities; but in an undigested condition acts as an irritant to the system generally. And the irritated system causes the individual to become a source of unpleasantness to those about him until the whole community feels the effects of the poor digestion.

Men should provide plenty of good food; a good stove to cook it; wood in sufficient quantity and of proper quality, and abundance of pure water; and the wife and mother should know how and faithfuliy see to it that all meals are served to the best advantage from a sanatary point of view. And then will there be far less grumbling and hard feelings in families, and in communities. By all means let mothers learn their daughters to cook well and so far as they can to abolish this family splitter. Let us have good cooking.

A Few Fair Day Follies.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—Dear Sir; may I be permitted through your columns to mention two incidents which came under my notice last Fair day.

(1) A man cruelly beating two dumb oxen; apparently without any provocation.

(2) A man in a helpless condition trying for a long time to hitch his horses to his wagon, and then trying to drive away. After travelling some distance he turned back, presumably to the place where he became helpless. I may as well say the man appeared to be drunk. The horses started for home by themselves, being doubtless, hungry and thursty with waiting outside all day; jolted one calf out of the wagon, breaking its neck, and the last I heard of them was from a person who saw them going at a furious pace along the Rockford road.

Now Sir, such incidents, and are they not of frequent occurrence? need no comment from me, yet I cannot help protesting in the name of humanity and decency against such things. They are a disgrace to any civilized community and disfigure our village every Fair day and oftener.

The law forbids profane and obscene language I believe, and people who use it to the disgust of passers by should be stopped. If they must get drunk they ought to be locked up; the law forbids drunken people being loose in the streets.

I only express the complaints I hear on every side. Ladies dare not go along River Street on Fair day, or any one who respects himself and dislikes vile language and cruelty and drunkenness; nor is it safe to drive in the outskirts of the village for fear of runaway horses; or horses in charge of drunken drivers. They should be kept till they are sober, for the public safety. Then there is the cruelty of leaving horses tied up all day without water, which frequently happens.

There should be a remedy for these evils. At present it may do some good to give them publicity, which I thank you for doing. I remain, Yours truly,
TABOR DAVIES.

Mc Gary Some More.

INDEPENDENCE, Minn., Sept. 10, '95.
EDITOR BUEFALO GAZETTE:—For one who is a farmer depending upon Mother Earth and Providence for a living must say considering all things I am quite happy, and would be more so were all mankind blessed with food, raiment and the comforts of this life. But thousands of our people are on the ragged edge of poverty, and know not where they will get food and shelter for the coming winter.

I think we are much in need of a new code of laws that will not allow so much latitude between the Jew and the Gentile; for we all are of one flesh, but not of the same house.

The Jews are the bankers of the world; and the money lords are our taskmasters. But Paul says: "These light afflictions worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory." But sometimes it is hard to look upon these things with good grace, and then shout Epluribus Unum (one composed of many.)

The leading Press (them that are bought up) of the country; and the full fledged politician: groomed, and dressed in his royal robe of authority are now telling us how we should vote in order to preserve our free institutions and save this country from bankruptcy, but at the same time they mean for you to vote so as to save their party; but a political party is no legal organization, authorized by the laws of our country; neither have the political tricksters a patent upon the rights and privileges of these fellows; but we are free and independent citizens; free to act our own pleasure so long as we keep within the limits of the law. "We need a little higher protection on wheat and potatoes in order that the farmer may get a better price for said produce." Such talk about protection is perfectly outlandish; sounds like the voice of a heathen, and is enough to make an intelligent farmer throw up his last meal

It is so dry and hot everybody is wishing for rain. Plowing is getting to be almost an impossibility in places.

James Turnham, our genial merchant, went to Minneapolis last evening on business and to take in the fair.

Mr. S. Muffley, Ex-County Superintendent of Schools, of Wright County, was in our town yesterday on business.

George Phillips and wife, of Minnetonka, are visiting friends and relatives in our town this week.

Farmers are cutting corn, plowing and wishing for rain.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Sept. 6, 1895

Who willl be the democratic candidate next year? That question is asked of every prominent democrat who comes to Washington these days, for the talk of nominating President Cleveland for a third term is considered meaningless by most Democrats. The three men who ar oftenest named sor that honor are ex-Secretary Whitney, of New York, Secretary Carlisle, of Kentucky, and Hon. William R. Morrison, of Ill., either of whom would make a good candidate and a goood President. Other gentlemen are named, but those three are named oftenest and many name them all and say that one of the three will be nominated. Representative Tucker, of Va., who was in Washington this week, named two of them in expressing his opinion. He said: "We are going to nominate one of the two men for the Presidency. It will be either Carlisle or Morrison. The silver men will probably oppose Carlisle more determinedly than they would Morrison. He will be stronger in the east, however, and the fact that he is a southern man will be enough to give him the sentiment of that section. I suppose the west will be more favorable to Morrison and that the silver men would be better satisfied with him."

Secretary Morton has not a very high opinion of the business sense displayed in some of the legislation of the last Congress, as he has shown by his refusal to spend $168,000 appropriated to buy seeds for free distribution. He this week cited another instance of bad business legislation. Congress authorized a new edition of what is popularly known as the "Horse Book". These books will cost the government about 60 cents each, and Secretary Morton says the same quantity could have been bought from the dealers in government publications, who buy largely from Congressmen for 40 cents each. Secretary Morton is not alone in thinking such legislation unbusinesslike.

The Democratic Congressional Committee does not as a rule take part in strictly state campaigns, but the campaign in Utah, which will send two U. S. Senators and one R presentative to Congress, has been made an exception, and the committee has been aiding the Utah democrats in every way possible. In view of the vote at the last territorial election—republican 21,000, democrat 19,000, and populist 500—neither party has any reason to feel overconfident of the result of the present campaign. The only thing absolutely certain about Utah is that one of the new Senators will be a Gentile and one a Mormon. The Congressional delegation will be for silver because it would be impossible for either party to elect any other, and the leaders of both parties have agreed about the Senators.

Secretary Herbert has given Admiral Kirkland a sharp official reprimand for a bit of flunkeyism which he was guilty of during the celebration attending the opening of the North Sea and Baltic canal. When the Admiral, his staff, and the officers of the cruiser New York were all drawn up on the bridge of that vessel to receive a visit from Emperor William, Admiral Kirkland noticed that Rev. H. H. Clark, chaplain of the New York, wore his ordinary clerical garments. He directed Capt. Evans (fighting Bob), commander of the vessel to order the chaplain to go below because he was not in special full dress uniform. Capt. Evans demurred on the ground that the chaplain had on the only dress provided for him by the naval regulations, and that being an officer he was entitled to the right of remaining on the bridge. Admiral Kirkland thereupon gave Capt. Evans a pernatory order to send the chaplain below and of course, Capt. Evans was obliged to obey his superior officer. Chaplain Clark made a complaint to the Department, forwarding a full statement of the affair, accompanied by one from Capt. Evans, and Admiral Kirkland also made a statement.

General Coppinger, who is now in Washington, says that neither the Wyoming settlers nor the Bannock Indians were to blame for the Jackson Hole Indian troubles, but that the migratory class known as "Rustlers" were at the bottom of the whole business. General Coppinger favors annexing the Jackson Hole region to the Yellowstone National Park, but in view of the probable opposition from Wyoming it is not probable that Secretary Lamont will make such a recommendation to Cyngress.

Plant Trees.

We concur with a writer in one of our exchanges who says:

Farmers through the United States are making a mistake when they fail to plant trees on their land not suited to crops, and along their lains, fences and highways. Without any other expense than that of planting the young trees they could provide for fine rows of maple, oak, pine, birch, hickory, walnut, and other trees on their farms, all of which would be increasing in value every year. Again, they might plant fruit trees and thus secure abundance of cherries, peaches, apples, plums, and other fruits. In some of the older parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania the farms are crossed, recrossed, and bounded by rows of cherry and other fruit trees, and the owners look upon these as remunerative and almost indispensable.—Scientific American.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

Labor Saving Machinery.

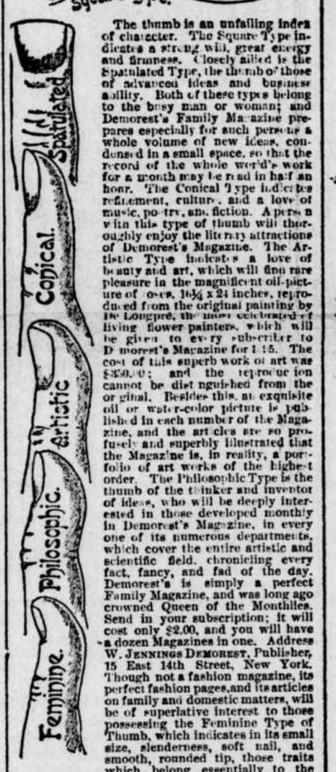
The Detroit Free Press: "It is well known how ingenious machinery has well-nigh revolutionized the once intricate work of the carpenter, leaving only the simplest part of the trade for manual labor. Never was this innovation of patented devices more marked than between 1880 and 1890, yet there were 53,547 carpenters in the United States in the former year, while there were 140,621 in 1890, and the average wages of the latter were $675 as against $450 for those who had far less machinery to contest with. Between the same years great strides were made in the moulding and handling of brick by machinery, yet the number of workmen doubled while the number of yards was slightly increased, and the wages advanced from an annual average of $228 to $300. In few industries has the saving of labor by machinery been more marked than in the manufacture of furniture, and the cheapening of the product has been simply amazing; yet the number of men employed in it increased from 55,304 in 1880 to 92,304 in 1890, wages advancing from an average of $423 to $527. This line of evidence might be pursued throughout the list of industries whre, for any considerable time machinery has been doing the work of brains and hands. The conclusion forced is that the introduction of labor-saving machinery is not to reduce permanently the number of employes, but simply to readjust the working force and insure higher wages."—Scientific American.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
Square Type.



The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of over 16¾ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpre, the most celebrated of living flower painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the nttler sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and you will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put you in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

TEXAS has fifteen counties without a single post office, and sixty-four counties without a newspaper.

MASSACHUSETTS believes in having things handy. There is but one settlement of any size that is located more than a dozen miles from a railroad.

THE American Machinist asks: "Why does a bicycle stand up?" A good many fellows wearing sticking plaster will ask: "Why doesn't the blame thing stand up?"

A MATCH-CUTTING machine is quite an automatic curiosity. It cuts 10,000,000 a day and then arranges them over a vat, where the heads are put on at a surprising rate of speed.

RUSSIAN journals are still mourning for the late czar. They will continue to surround their front page with a border of black until a year has elapsed from the date of his death.

THE story that an Ohio woman who had been speechless for six years was cured by hypnotism is highly improbable. Who can believe that any woman was ever speechless for six years?

IN his old age Donald G. Mitchell, who won fame under the pen name of "Ik Marvel," devotes himself to landscape gardening, and New Haven's beautiful parks are evidence of his ability in this direction.

A NUMBER of striking Indians who were making hay for a Minnesota farmer threatened to scalp the farmer if he did not pay them their wages. The tendency of the red man to split hairs over inconsequential differences like this is what retards the solution of the Indian problem.

THE lynching of horse-thieves is not so popular in the far west as formerly. Possibly this is because that great section is outgrowing its former lawlessness, but more likely the reason will be found in the fact that horses have become so cheap that they are not worth making a fuss about.

IN ecstacy over the opening of the oyster season the Chicago Tribune says: "The oysters now is on our shore, Maryland, my Maryland. Litum-ti-tum-ti as before, Maryland, my Maryland. Ri-tooral-looral o'er and o'er, tra-la-la-la abundant store, hi-umpty bumpty send some more, Maryland, my Maryland."

A BICYCLE with the speed of 7 miles per hour has a momentum of 1,500 pounds. This is enough to upset the pedestrian, but is not pleasant for the bicycle when it impinges against a wagon loaded with cordwood or brick. The wisest thing for a bicycle rider is to always look ahead and take no uncertain chances.

DR. SMITH, the author of "America," says he would rather see the thousands proposed for a memorial to him given to make permanent, as a Lincoln memorial, the house where the martyred president died in Washington. It is now temporarily occupied as a museum of the "relics" of Lincoln first collected in Springfield, Ill.

SECRETARY MORTON has ordered that the cans of horse meat must be labeled. The secretary should go a little further and order that the color and age of the animal be put on the labels. To be eating a sorrel filet from a horse that did duty before the war under the impression that you are devouring a chestnut filly of tender years is an imposition that the astute secretary should guard against.

THE lightest woman's bicycle is said to have been the creation of a wealthy and ingenious young Denver woman. The frame work is of aluminum, made as light and hollow as our knowledge of the metal will permit; the rim is wood, the spokes or wires of nickel steel, the tire a pneumatic one, and the gearing some ingenious contrivance by a local machinist. The weight is said to be only seven pounds.

OF all the murderous implements of war that have been invented the Odkolck automatic machine gun gives promise of being the deadliest. It is so constructed that after being set in motion by pulling the trigger it continues to load and fire itself, at the rate of six hundred shots a minute, for an indefinite length of time. The motive power is a small part of the gas produced by the explosion of the cartridge.

EX-GOV. ROBERTS, of Texas, is a queer character. Recently he was called upon to deliver an address to the inmates of the state penitentiary. The governor, after viewing his audience for a few minutes, began: "Gentlemen—but, no," he hesitated, "you're not gentlemen or you would not be here." He paused for another moment. "Fellow citizens, then—" He stopped again. "No, you're not citizens, either." The governor grew impatient for want of something to say. "Well," he began again, "it doesn't matter what you are, I'm blamed glad to see so many of you here."

AMERICAN farmers have no reason to complain if land values have not fully recovered from the recent influences exerted by the general business depression. In England the situation is far more serious, and at a recent sale property which included 639 acres of land, farmhouse, stabling, homestead and seven modern cottages, was sold for only $28,500. Fifteen years ago this property was worth $100,000. In this country many farms are to-day worth much less than they were fifteen years ago, but such depreciation in value as this is the exception, not the rule.

WHETHER or not the derelicts of the sea are in reality the terrors to ocean voyagers they seem to be in the landsman's imagination may be a question, but that they should be exterminated as far as possible admits of no doubt. For thousands of miles they float like ghosts up and down the Atlantic, now governed by the viewless winds, and now by the ocean tides or the gulf stream. They are the vagabonds—the tramps of the deep. An effort is now being made to arrange a plan by which the United States and Great Britain shall unite to exterminate these monsters of the deep.

MINERS PERISH.

Fire Breaks Out in a Copper Mine in Michigan.

Thirty-Five Men Entombed in the Burning Pit—All Avenues of Escape Cut Off, and They Are Doubtless Dead.

HOUGHTON, Mich., Sept. 10.—At 12:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon fire was discovered by timbermen in the thirty-seventh level of the Osceola copper mine. The timbermen at once rushed to the shaft, and when brought to the surface in the big bucket gave the alarm.

The blaze on the thirty-seventh level is 2,600 feet below the earth's surface. The underground workings are heavily timbered with pine, and as the fire spread it generated great quantities carbonic acid gas, which sank to the lower level, so that death from suffocation is as certain to all in the level below the thirty-seventh as to those above. Smoke is pouring in dense volumes from the mouth of every shaft in the mine, and escape through those openings is impossible.

An Incendiary's Work.

It is now positively known that the thirty-five men entombed cannot possibly escape, nor can their bodies be recovered until the fire is entirely extinguished, which may not be for months. It is the opinion of some of the oldest officials of the mine that the fire was the work of an incendiary. They say there could be no other explanation of the fire starting in that portion by any other means, as no oil, waste or rubbish is used or accumulates there, and the timber work is out of the reach of the lamps on the miners' hats.

The Burning Mine.

The Osceola is, next to the Tamarack, the chief copper producer in the Clark Bigelow group. It has been in continuous operation since 1888 and paid average dividends of $100,000 annually. The deepest point of the mine is 2,700 feet.

LATER REPORTS.

Two Relief Parties Enter the Mine, But All Hope Is Dead.

CALUMET, Mich., Sept. 11.—Ten miners went down the southernmost shaft of the Osceola mine Monday morning. The men were especially selected among the fearless and experienced workmen, habited to breathing powder smoke and foul air. The party descended in the skip, or iron car, used in bringing up rock from the mine to the 24th level, and managed to press north on that level to within 250 feet of No. 4 shaft, next south of the burning one. At that point two of the party were overcome by the gas, and to save adding fresh victims to the already long list the relief expedition turned back. In No. 1 shaft at the other end of the mine a similar attempt was made by a carefully organized party similar to the first, but at the depth of only 280 feet down the shaft smoke was met in such volume that it was foolhardy to descend further and the miners quickly came to the surface. The experience of the rescuing parties are in Nos. 1 and 5, where the smoke would naturally be met with in the least quantities, renders it certain that the entire mine is now filled with it, and cuts off the last hope that the missing men may have been able to preserve their lives. Rescuing parties will be sent down as frequently as possible to test the condition. It will probably be several days before the mine will be clear of smoke, even if the fire has gone out, which is quite doubtful. Every shaft was late Monday afternoon ordered tightly closed up, to remain so for twenty-four hours.

DURRANT'S DEFENSE.

Hopes to Prove a Complete Alibi and Indicate the Real Murderer.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 11.—An evening paper prints a sensational story about the defense which will be offered in the trial of Theodore Durrant for the murder of Blanche Lamont. The story is credited to a person connected with the defense. The defense has witnesses to show that Durrant not only did not commit the murder but will indicate who did it. There will be more than one implicated in the murder. Witnesses will testify that they saw the girl enter the church on the fatal afternoon with a certain man, and at that time a second man was in the church. There the defense will rest its inquiry. It will not attempt to prove that these parties did commit the murder. The statements as to this are so direct that they will leave no ground for the prosecution to stand on, so far as Durrant is concerned.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Atrocities by Spaniards as revolting as those committed by the Japanese at Port Arthur have just been reported to the Cuban revolutionary party in New York. It is dated "Headquarters, in the field, August 3," and sends details of the capture and recapture of the city of Baire, and the massacre of thirty-seven inoffensive Cubans—mostly women and children—by the Spaniards under Commander Garrido.

MORE OUTRAGES.

Turkish Troops Sack Armenian Villages and Ill Treat the Inhabitants.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Kars, Armenia, says that the entire district of Kemaka is surrounded by Turkish troops dispatched by Zekki Pasha under the plea of arresting Armenian revolutionaries. The villages of Carni, Tiruguegner, Tortan, Horoput and Marig are reported to be completely sacked, and the population, aggregating 5,000 people, were ill-treated. The men were tortured and the women and children were assaulted. The four monasteries of Auakwauk, Sourphop, Thervorithchoga and Souphagop were sacked and the altars and images were destroyed. The excitement and alarm are universal. Authentic information from Moush is to the effect that an anti-Christian society of Turkish officials has been formed there and at Bitlis with the avowed intention to slaughter the Christians in the event of the acceptance by the porte of the scheme of reforms presented by the powers. It is declared that Consul Hampson is to be the first victim.

GUTTED BY FIRE.

Boston's Magnificent Masonic Temple Badly Damaged.

BOSTON, Sept. 10.—Fire which broke out in the ante-room of Paul Revere lodge rooms in Masonic temple, at Boyleston and Tremont streets, was confined to the third and fourth floors of the building.

The total loss was about $300,000. Of this amount $60,000 was on the building, the upper story of which was burned out, while the lower stories were deluged with water. The greatest loss was sustained on the costly furniture and furnishings, which embraced paraphernalia, works of art and relics, the property of the grand lodge of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

The temple, built in 1893, cost $100,000, raised by a tax levied on the masons of Boston. It ranks as the best specimen of gothic architecture in the country.

A package containing $16,000 deposited Friday by Internal Revenue Collector Jump to be shipped to the Cincinnati subtreasury is also missing. # MINNESOTA NEWS.

The New Seminary.

The exercises incident to the dedication of the new Theological Seminary of St. Paul were inaugurated with the celebration of high pontifical mass by Mgr. Satoli in the seminary chapel, which was crowded with clergy of the arch-diocese and representative Catholic churchmen from different parts of the country.

The institution is a personal tribute to Archbishop Ireland, from James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railroad. He contributed every dollar of the cost of the construction (over $500,000), personally planned the buildings and superintended their construction. Henceforth, this seminary will be the center of Catholicism in the Northwest. It is situated on the banks of the Mississippi river, and the new buildings are admirably adapted to the work of instruction. Ten teachers will be employed, and they are among the best educated men in the church. An extensive library of theological works has been gathered, which has completed the equipments of the buildings. In addition to the studies proper to the ministry, and which extend over six years, the curriculum will comprise a higher course in science, literature and political economy. The following chairs are endowed: Biology and physiological psychology, chemistry and natural philosophy, logic and metaphysics, apologetics, ethics, dogmatic theology, moral theology, sacred scripture, ecclesiastical history. Besides these main studies, canon law, political economy, church music and the languages, including Greek and Hebrew, will receive considerable attention.

The Hayward Case.

The attorneys for Harry Hayward, having failed up to the present time to file with the supreme court a return in the case, the following notice was served upon W. W. Erwin by the attorney general:

You are, therefore, hereby required to file or cause to be filed with the said clerk a proper return in said action within 20 days after the service of this notice upon you."

An Oddity.

The Mankota News is responsible for the following: One of the most remarkable oddities on record is found in the case of a child born only a few days ago at a house in the limits of this city. The father of the child is a mulatto and the mother an octoroon. The entire body of the child is distinctly divided into black and white, one-half being very fair and the other as black as an Ethiopian. Why nature should have chosen such a peculiar method of arranging the pigment is a puzzle for the doctors. While the story sounds a little like Munchausen, the truth of the matter is beyond question.

The Twin Cities.

The agony that has existed over the comparative population of St. Paul and Minneapolis was settled by the official bulletins of the secretary of state, which gave Minneapolis 192,833 and St. Paul 140,292. This shows that the talked-of excess of 50,000 of Minneapolis over St. Paul is confirmed in the exact figures of 52,541. Also that while Minneapolis in five years has increased 27,645, St. Paul increased but 7,136; that is, while St. Paul has increased 5¾ per cent. Minneapolis has increased very nearly 15 per cent. The most sanguine had not expected Minneapolis to exceed 10 per cent.

News in Brief.

The Indians working for Frank Vance, of Deer River, gathering his hay crop, struck and threatened to scalp him if he did not advance their wages. Bishop Marty, of St. Cloud, has promulgated the decree against the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows and Knights Templars. The announcement was made by the priest at early mass. Catholics are forbidden to hereafter join these secret societies, on pain of excommunication from the church, and those who are already members were requested to consult either the bishop or their pastor. Only a few Catholics belong to these societies in St. Cloud.

Secretary of State Berg was the surprised recipient of a tribute of respect from the St. Paul enumerators of the census bureau. The tribute was in the form of a massive ebony cone, adorned by a still more massive gold head. In fact the cane was so large and heavy that in the hands of an ordinary man it looked like a drum major's batton, but it seemed to fit the generous prop six feet three inches of the genial secretary to a nicety. The presentation speech was made by George Volter, as chairman of the committee on arrangements.

The Homeopathic hospital of Minneapolis has been closed for lack of funds.

State Treasurer Koerner has filed his report with the governor showing the condition of the state's money at the close of the 30 days ending Aug. 31. The new Christian church at Mankato was dedicated without debt.

SHE REMEMBERED.

And Her Inquisitive Caller Made a Graceful Sneak.

It was on Harrison avenue and the woman of the house sat on the side veranda sewing.

"Madam," began the man who had entered the yard after taking a long survey of the premises from the gate, "do you remember of my calling here about three years ago?"

"Yes, sir," she promptly replied.

"An! I am very glad! Yes, I called here about three years ago. You were sitting just where you are now."

"Yes, sir."

"Do you remember of my telling you that men had robbed and swindled and deceived me?"

"I do."

"That misfortune had overtaken me and that my years had been one long struggle with adversity?"

"I do."

"That my wife lost her life in the great Chicago fire, and my four darling children were drowned in the Johnstown flood?"

"I do."

"Ah! I thank you for remembering these things! Perhaps you also remember that I said that I was hungry and sadly in need of clothing?"

"I do."

"Ah! Yes! How it touches my heart that you remember! And, now, madam, you, of course, remember what you did for me?"

"I do, sir," replied the woman. "I whistled for the dog. He came around the corner of the house. You had ten feet the start of him, but he got one of your coattails as you passed through the gate. The dog is still here and in good spirits. Shall I whistle him up, or do you want to get out gracefully?"

"Gracefully, madam — gracefully!" replied the man as he began moving away. "Yes'm—thanks—three years—you remember—so do I—so would the dog—good-bye!"—Detroit Free Press.

Chickamauga.

Thirty-two years ago—Sept. 19-21, 1863—"Old Rosy" and his army of the Cumberland, who had been following Bragg from Murfreesboro since the preceding January, were treated to a surprise on the banks of Chickamauga creek. Rosecranz knew that his enemy, who had evacuated Chattanooga, in haste, was somewhere in the hilly country to the south, and planned to fall upon him from several directions and compel a surrender of the whole rebel army. What Rosecranz did not know was that Longstreet's corps of veterans from Virginia were already re-inforcing Bragg, and when he found it out, the Union army was making good time away from a lost field. Had it not been for "Pap Thomas" and the Fourteenth Corps, our boys might not have stopped at Chattanooga that night. Many are yet living who were among the visiting tourists there then, though most of the leaders have passed away. This month there will be another great gathering of visitors near Chickamauga, but instead of the armed soldiers of thirty years ago, it will be composed of their sons and daughters—the Epworth League, missionaries of peace and goodwill. A low rate is made by the railroads—open to all, whether members of the league or not—and never will you have a better opportunity to visit this historic battle ground, now in the hands of the government as a reservation park, dotted with monuments to show points of note. Tickets should be purchased of your home agent via the Burlington Route, which has the best accommodations, and offers two routes—via Chicago or via St. Louis. ## MY OTHER BOY.

My boys know not that while they stand
Expectantly beside my knee,
Between their heads of black and brown,
Another sunny head I see.

And when their eyes look up to mine—
Black eyes and blue, so full of joy,
My eyes, though dim with tears, can see
The brown eyes of another boy.

The sweet brown eyes in which the light
So suddenly had ceased to shine,
When God had harshly seemed to say:
"Daughter, he is not thine but Mine."

The heads of black and brown rise higher,
As year by year speeds on its way.
Black eyes and blue more thoughtful shine
As life grows wider every day.

And as I mark each change, I see,
The sunny head lift higher, too,
The brown eyes sweeter, wiser, gleam,
As heavenly visions greet their view.

Dear hearts! Come, let us closer lean,
Learning our lessons line by line.
Now I have learned at last to say:
"Dear Lord, the boys are Thine and mine."
—Mary H. Heath, in Union Signal.

BY MUTUAL CONSENT.

Mr. and Mrs. Messinger were simple, unaffected people, devoted to their children and to Nancy, Mr. Messinger's young stepsister.

One sunny afternoon in early summer Mrs. Messinger sat at the open bay window of the drawing-room reading. The door opened presently and Nancy came in rather slowly. She came over to the window and seated herself in a low basket chair with an air of constraint.

"I have a letter from Jim," she said.

"Does he say when he is coming?"

"Yes; he came by the same steamship as the letter. He will be here tomorrow, I suppose."

"Nancy! really?" asked Mary, looking almost excited. "Are you not delighted?"

"I—I—have a confession to make," said Nancy, nervously, looking out over the sea. "I thought I loved Jim when he went out to India five years ago, but I was only seventeen then, and did not realize what love meant. We had known each other all our lives, and I mistook our friendship for love.

"I have felt it dimly for a year or two, but what made it all clear to me was Jim's last letter, saying that he was coming home. It filled me with dismay and fear. I felt that I simply could not meet him as his betrothed wife, so I wrote last mail and asked him to release me from my engagement."

"And what does he say?" Mary asked, anxiously.

"He is delighted," said Nancy, brightening. "He says that his feelings have changed too."

"You never hinted at any change before," said Mary, a little reproachfully.

"I only knew it dimly or I might have done so," replied Nancy, gently. "And since I wrote to him I have been silent to spare you any anxiety. My letters have never been from the present Nancy, but from the Nancy as I could remember her at seventeen. In fact, I have been writing down all the time to the level of his intelligence as shown in his letters, and that level is painfully low."

"He would be much more likely to object if he once saw you," said Mary, frankly, "for these five years have done wonders with you in every way."

"Oh, he's so boyish that he will think me strong-minded, and therefore dislike me," said Nancy, laughing. "And I did send him my last photograph, you know."

"Did you send that hideous thing?" asked Mary in surprise.

"Well," confessed Nancy, rather reluctantly, "I believe I had some secret, unconfessed hope that he would offer to break off the engagement if he once saw that hideous caricature."

A day or two later Nancy started for her usual afternoon walk along the cliffs. Walking quickly along, she did not hear footsteps behind her, and was surprised at hearing herself suddenly addressed. Looking up with startled eyes, she found a young man gazing at her with a puzzled, intent expression in his handsome face.

"You are Nancy, are you not?" he said, doubtfully, holding out his hand.

"Why, Jim, is it really you?" asked Nancy, regarding him with surprise. "How you have grown! When did you come? and how did you find me?"

"I came two days ago," he said, reddening slightly in irritation at her first words, "but I called at the Ness this afternoon and Mrs. Messinger told me where I should find you."

"Let us go home now, and then you can see them all," she said, turning back. "You will hardly know the children; they were such mites when you left."

"I certainly shall not, if they have altered as much as you have done. I scarcely knew you," he said, looking down at her with intent gray eyes, and inwardly comparing this beautiful, graceful girl with the gauche schoolgirl of five years since.

"I am older," she said, her heart sinking strangely. "He might disguise the fact that he finds me a disappointing failure," she thought, rather bitterly.

"Of course we are no longer boy and girl," he said. "But I hope we shall always be friends, Nancy! We have been that all our lives, haven't we?"

"Yes, let us be friends," she said. And, thinking that he was eager to impress upon her that they were to be nothing more, she added: "And it was very wise to break off that childish engagement before you came home, wasn't it?"

"Y—yes," he said, doubtfully. "Those boy and girl engagements never answer, do they? People develop so differently from what one would expect. Judging from your letters, I should have thought you utterly different from what I find you."

"You are equally different from what I should have expected you to be," she answered. "But let us put up with each other as we are; we need not see much of one another, you know."

They had just reached the gate leading into the garden of the Ness as she said this, and unconsciously she paused outside.

Jim took this, coupled with her last words, as a hint that he should go, and was more hurt than he cared to own.

"Good afternoon," he said, stiffly, raising his hat. "Your suggestion is a brilliant one, and you need not fear that I shall trouble you with my presence more often than is necessary."

"Good-by," she said, turning in at the open gate in order that he should not see the rising tears.

"Good-by," he said, freezingly, thinking her absolutely cruel in not shaking hands.

If Mrs. Messinger had been given to abstruse reflections she might have asked herself how Jim and Nancy could possibly avoid each other, according to the compact, when he was always coming to the Ness?

For he came every day and at all hours of the day, as he had been wont to do five years ago.

Nancy lost all her gentle brightness when speaking to Jim, and was coldly, distantly polite to him. Inwardly she knew that her love for him was strengthening day by day, and that no power of hers could prevent it.

His position in regard to Nancy was much worse than that of any mere acquaintance. Every other man could tell her of his love, while it seemed to Jim that he had lost right by gladly agreeing to cancel their engagement.

One afternoon he found her alone, a very rare occurrence indeed, for she was careful to avoid a tete-a-tete with him.

"Shall we go into the garden?" she asked, thinking that anything was preferable to sitting stiffly in the drawing-room.

"I should like it immensely," he answered, rising and opening the door with alacrity. "Will you take me to your old favorite seat? I have so often thought of those days when I was feeling homesick, Nancy."

"I thought you were very happy in India?" she said, unresponsively.

"So I was, but I was homesick sometimes, especially when I first went out."

"Mr. Penstone and I always quarrel over this view," said Nancy, anxious to prevent any embarrassing pause.

"Who is Mr. Penstone?" asked Jim, knitting his brows.

"He is our curate," she answered. "I always say that this is the finest view in town, but Mr. Penstone maintains that the view from—"

"He must be an idiot, then," burst in Jim, hotly; "the views are not to be compared!"

"You might have waited until I had mentioned the other," said Nancy, raising her eyebrows.

"I—I beg your pardon," he said, in utter confusion. "I thought you must mean—in fact, I understood you to say—that—that the view from Beacon was finer than this."

"Yes, that is what Mr. Penstone declares," she said.

"What a hideous name the man has!" said Jim, irritably. "Of course you are devoted to him, Nancy?"

"Yes, he is so very good and clever and pleasant," she said, surprised at his vehemence.

"You are going to marry him, I suppose?" he said, with ill-concealed anger.

"You forget yourself, I think," she answered, with gentle dignity. "And whom I may marry can be no possible concern of yours."

"O, none, of course," he said, furiously. "Only you might have told me the truth when you broke off our engagement. It would have been just as easy to say that you were engaged to some one else at once."

"You are entirely mistaken in thinking that I am engaged to anyone," said Nancy, calmly. "Mr. Penstone is married and old enough to be my father. Shall we go in now, or have you any other interesting accusations to make?"

"Forgive me, Nancy, I was a fool!" pleaded Jim, earnestly. "I forget sometimes that I have not still the right to speak to you on such matters. For five years I have thought of you as my promised wife, and now that I am with you I cannot always realize that you are mine no longer. Say, that you forgive me, Nancy, for my roughness and presumption."

After this quarrel Jim found it impossible to be on the same footing of friendship with Nancy. She was colder and more constrained than ever in her manner toward him, and he was too proud and too manly to force his love on her, believing that she disliked him; and at last, after a bitter struggle with himself, he determined to return to India at once.

He had never been to the Ness lately without some valid reason, and this new decision was so good an excuse for calling that he was not slow in taking advantage of it. He found Nancy in the garden, arrayed in a large white sun bonnet, busy gathering strawberries for tea.

"I am going back to India; I have had enough of England."

"To India? At once? O, why?" she asked piteously, growing very white and looking at him with frightened eyes.

"Do you care, Nancy?" he asked eagerly. "Would you rather I stayed?"

"My wishes have nothing to do with the matter," she said, rather bitterly.

"Indeed, they have," he said, very earnestly. "Nancy, tell me, would you rather I stayed?"

"If I say yes, would you stay?" she asked, quietly.

"Only if you loved me," he said. "I cannot stay on and see you day after day, and feel that you will never care for me. May I stay, Nancy?"

"If you like," she answered shyly.

"There is one thing I want to know," he said, presently, looking down into her eyes; "when did you begin to love me, dear?"

"When did you begin to love me?" she replied, blushing under his gaze.

"I don't know; I have loved you all my life," he answered.

"I don't know, either," she said; "when I was about four or five, I think."

"But, my darling, you broke off our engagement," he said, wonderingly.

"Yes, from your letters I thought I did not love you. They were so stupid—I—I mean—"

"Yes; they were stupid, but yours were silly, too, and I thought that was the kind of things you liked," he said, intelligence dawning in his eyes.

"I thought you were terribly boyish, so wrote very 'young' letters, thinking they would interest you," she said, beginning to laugh.

"We both fell into the same mistake, then," he said, laughing, too.—Waverly Magazine.

Blastus Godly!

The Roundheads were proud of such names as Hew-their-bones-asunder Smith, Bind-their-kings-in-chains-and-their-nobles-with-links-of-iron Jackson, and If-Jesus-Christ-had-not-died-for-thee-thou-hadst-been-damned Barebones — the latter gentleman being usually known as Damned Dr. Barebones, for shortness. One poor fellow was actually christened — and doubtless in all reverence — Blastus Godly. We must confesswse are glad the days of Puritanism are ended. We prefer names likeTom, Dick and Harry.—Chambers' Journal.

HOUSEHOLD BREVITIES.

—Geneva Salmon.—Tie up a piece of salmon, and place in a kettle with sliced onions, carrots, salt, spices, and a pint of claret or port; when done take from the liquor and serve cold with tartar sauce.—Harper's Bazar.

—Currant and Raspberry Jelly.—A jelly much prized for its peculiar delicate flavor can be made by taking equal quantities of currants and red raspberries and putting them through the strainer together. Then proceed with the juice as though it were of pure currants.—Prairie Farmer.

—Clover Vinegar.—Put a large bowl of molasses in a crock and pour over it nine bowls of boiling rain water; let it stand until milk warm, put in two quarts of clover blossoms and two cups of baker's yeast; let it stand two weeks and strain through a towel. Nothing will mold in it.—Farmers' Voice.

—To Keep Cut Flowers.—When cut flowers have faded, either by being worn a whole evening in one's dress, or as a bouquet, by cutting half an inch from the end of the stem, in the morning, and putting the freshly trimmed end instantly into quite boiling water, the petals may be seen to smooth out and resume their beauty, often in a few minutes.—Leeds Mercury.

—Canned Elderberries.—To a gallon of black elderberries that have been stemmed and washed add one quart of vinegar. If the vinegar is very strong use a little less. When they have boiled a minute or two, pour into glass jars and seal. When wanted for pies add sugar to taste and thicken with a little flour, using one pint of berries. Elderberries prepared in this way make excellent pies.—Farm and Fireside.

—Turbot a la Creme.—Three pounds of halibut or cod boiled with plenty of salt; remove the skin and bones, and flake. Boil one bunch of parsley and one large onion in a little water to extract the flavor; take out and thicken with three tablespoonfuls of flour, then add it to one quart of cream and milk together (more cream improves it), and one half cup of butter. Put alternate layers of fish and sauce in a deep, buttered dish (sauce on top) cover with breadcrumbs and bake until brown.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Simple baked apples form a delightful and wholesome breakfast dish. They should be neither sour nor sweet; pare and core them, place them in a baking tin, fill up the holes of the apples with sugar and a little nutmeg or cinnamon. They may be eaten with cream and sugar, or whipped cream sweetened and delicately flavored with lemon. They are very nice if taken from the oven as soon as done and covered thinly with the whites of eggs, whipped to a stiff froth and sweetened, and then returned to the oven for one moment before serving.—Western Rural.

FASHION NOTES.

What Is Being Worn by Well-Dressed Women.

The taffeta silk will not reign alone this year, for satin will be very popular, both in black and colors.

There is a new wool that the dressmakers are using now for handsome traveling gowns. It is a very light, thin stuff, of loosely woven mohair. The strands are very thick, and shed the dust like a course canvas. A charming costume is built of this in a light brown. The skirt is untrimmed, and on each side the goods are arranged in a flat side plait about five inches deep. These side plaits appear on a number of the latest wool gowns in addition to the side and back godets.

A lovely black crepon is made with a silk lining of delicate pink, forming a transparency. The bodice had a square yoke and collar of lightly-plaited chiffon over pink, adorned with handsome jet ornaments, and a superb jet band encircled the waist. The hat worn with this dress was a picturesque affair in drawn pink chiffon, black straw and beautifully-shaded roses, while the black satin parasol was lined with pink chiffon.

The fashions are becoming prettier every day. Unfortunately, the ordinary visitor to Paris learns but little of the coming modes during a short stay in this capital of elegance; for, to know what to wear and especially how to wear it, it is necessary to be in daily touch with the great world of French couturiers and milliners, who guard their professional secrets with praiseworthy loyalty to each other. Only bona fide customers are treated frankly and with entire confidence by this distinguished confrerie, and inquisitive strangers who come merely with a view of picking up new ideas are at once detected and promptly checkmated.—Boston Budget.

A New Salad Dressing.

A delicious salad dressing is made of the same ingredients as a mayonnaise, but in different proportions. It contains only a small portion of oil and is thickened by cooking it over the fire. Begin with a fresh egg, beat it thoroughly with a patent egg beater—nothing else seems to do the work perfectly. Continue beating, add a liberal saladspoonful of oil and salt and pepper, beating all the time, and finally by degrees a half-cup of vinegar. Put the mixture in a double boiler and beat it well until it thickens, then remove it from the fire, beat it again while it cools, and when cold add a quarter of a cup of rich cream. Pour it over cold potatoes cut in delicate, thin slices. Remember that new potatoes make the most delicious salad. It is useless to make salad of winter potatoes. This dressing is excellent for a salad of new cabbage or for almost any vegetable salad.—N. Y. Tribune.

No Longer Live on Air.

It might be an interesting thing to expatiate on the growth of the feminine appetite. A century since a woman was not supposed to care for food, and not Byron alone would have been disgusted at any display of hunger on the part of a sex who, like Melvina Fitz-Allen, seemed to exist merely on strawberries and cream. Nor is the complaint, made only a few years ago, that a woman in a restaurant always called for ices and cakes, longer a fact. Women have learned the necessity of proper food, and it is a sight to do the doctor's heart good to watch their sensible selection of nutritious dishes and their enjoyment of them. Surely this must count for something in the development physically and mentally of the race.—N. Y. Times.

Had No Chance.

Visiting Clergyman—I suppose your career of crime began with playing truant from school?

Convict (silently)—It did not.

Visiting Clergyman—Can you look me in the face and declare that you never played hookey?

Convict—I reckon I can. There warn't no school.—Brooklyn Life.

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

—A large number of envelopes containing circulars and posted with a cent stamp have been returned in New York because they were sealed. It is claimed that the humidity of the atmosphere caused the flap to adhere to the envelope, making first-class matter of what was not so when sent.

—A fist fight in progress on the end of a wharf at Bar Harbor, Me., the other day, was interrupted by the appearance of the police. In their efforts to escape both principals stumbled over obstructions and fell into the harbor. They were fished out of the water with all fighting fervor washed out.

—The Fifth Monarchy men formed a religious sect that sprang up in the days of Charles I. of England. They were so called from the fact that they asserted that in the last days the four monarchies, the Assyrian, the Persian, the Babylonian and the Roman, would be restored, and to them would be added a Christian monarchy or fifth monarchy, of which Christ would be king.

—When leeches were kept in every chemist's shop, and often in private houses, their behavior was subject of constant observation; and it was generally noticed that in still weather, dry or wet, they remained at the bottom, but rose, often as much as twenty-four hours in advance, before a change; and in case of a thunderstorm rose very quickly to the surface, descending when it was past.

—A citizen of Ravenna, Mich., missed many of his young chickens. A portion of his yard is low and marshy, in which live spring water is constantly running. The chicks delighted to wade in this place. One day one of them was seen to flutter, apparently having one of its feet fast: upon investigation it was found that the leg of the chick was squarely in the mouth of a mud turtle lying concealed in the muck.

—Cellulose, a porous preparation prepared from cocoanut fibre, has been found exceedingly useful in stopping leaks in ships. A plug of it is thrust loosely into a large hole and soon swells with moisture until it fits snugly. The idea originated abroad, but an American has discovered that cellulose can be made out of the pith of cornstalks. The naval authorities have tested this latter variety of the product and find it efficacious.

—"Some folks say," said a fisherman, "that if a fish once gets into a pound net it never gets out until it is taken out, but as a matter of fact fish often get out of pound nets; it is common for sheepshead, bluefish, Spanish mackerel and shad to get out of them. I've been to a pound net on Sunday and counted two hundred and eighty-five bluefish, and when the net was hauled on Monday found only four or five. The fish get in and if they find the opening and get started right they can get out; they follow one another like a flock of sheep."

—Another historical tradition is being questioned. Everybody who knows anything at all of French history is aware that the son and successor of Pepin d'Heristal is always represented as having been nicknamed Charles Martel, because he was a "martel" to the Saracens, just as our own Edward I. was called the Malleus Scotorum on account of his victories over the Scotch. The Intermediaire has now brought to light an ancient document in which it is alleged that Pepin had but one son, "Charles Marcel." Marcel, which is a common Christian name in France, was corrupted into Martel, it is suggested by some scribe, and the error has been repeated for many hundreds of years.

UNDER TERRIBLE PRESSURE.

Grave Consequences of Diving One Hundred and Sixty Feet.

The steamer Alfonso XII., having on board ten boxes of gold coin, each box worth fifty thousand dollars, struck on a rock and sand at Grand Canary while on a voyage from Cadiz to Havana in 1886.

It was ascertained that the specie was at a depth of one hundred and sixty feet, and grave doubts were entertained of the possibility of any diver being able to withstand the tremendous pressure incidental to such a depth, viz., sixty-seven pounds to every superficial square inch of his body.

Experiments at this depth were made off Dartmouth and two men, Lambert and Tessier, were found equal to the perilous task, dresses having been prepared which would remain water-tight at this great depth.

An expedition was sent out by the marine insurance company, the divers to receive a reward of five per cent., or twenty-five hundred dollars on each box recovered. Lambert got up seven and Tessier two. So terrible was the pressure that neither man could stay below for more than a few minutes, and Lambert some time after his return suffered from chronic paralysis of the bowels, by which he was in many respects reduced to the hopeless condition of a babe in the cradle. Probably a tightly sealed kettle sent down empty to the same depth would have been crushed flat.

As it was the divers only succeeded in finding nine boxes out of the ten, fifty thousand thus remaining below.

A subsequent expedition went in search of this box, and the diver, after being down for twenty minutes, was hauled up only to die. Not a whit discouraged, another expedition went out with two divers from Germany.

The first of these was promptly hauled up half dead, only to be sent ashore to the hospital raving mad; the other went down, but returned, declaring that no box was there. Whether he really got so far as the lazarette from which the boxes were taken is open to doubt. The pressure at such depth must be positively crushing.

In the accounts of one of the deep-sea dredging expeditions it is mentioned that when the trawl was raised from a great depth the pressure proved to have been such as to crush together the wood of the trawl beam so that the knots started out of it.—Boston Traveler.

Change of Heart.

Deacon Skinnem—I can't tell you how blessed I am in my son now. You know I always had trouble getting him to go to church, but of late he has been going willingly, not only on Sundays but on week days. He never misses a service, and I feel at last that his soul is safe, and we will all meet together in that far-off heaven of love and peace, promised to the faithful.

Neighbor—Your son is in love with Miss De Poore, who sings in the choir.

Deacon Skinnem—What! Does he intend to marry that poverty-stricken minx? If he goes near that church again I'll disinherit him!—N. Y. Weekly

BANQUETS AND DINNERS.

A Great Deal of Money Spent in New York for These Affairs.

No statistician has ever turned his attention to making a record of the vast number of banquets and dinners held in New York during a period of twelve months, remarks the Advertiser of that city. The amount of money expended on such affairs in Gotham would astonish even the man of figures. The conclusion has been reached that New York is rapidly getting to be a community of epicures. Paris is celebrated the world over as a city whose people know better than any others how to live, but New York is making such rapid strides in this direction that the gay French capital will have to look to its laurels.

The figures as to the cost of public banquets given at the big uptown hostelries during a season are simply prodigious. No one who has not examined into the subject would imagine that they aggregate the vast sums they do. How many people know what one million dollars really is, and how many things can be accomplished with such a sum? This amount is expended every year in providing the viands and wines and entertainments for those who like to dine well together at public banquets. These figures do not include the vast number of private dinners given by the rich and exclusive people who find it more convenient to dine their friends at hotels than in their own houses.

CAUSED BY VACCINATION

From the Journal, Detroit, Mich.

Every one in the vicinity of Meldrum avenue and Champlain street, Detroit, knows Mrs. McDonald, and many a neighbor has reason to feel grateful to her for the kind and friendly interest she has manifested in cases of illness.

She is a kind-hearted friend, a natural nurse, and an intelligent and refined lady.

To a reporter she recently talked at some length about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, giving some very interesting instances in her own immediate knowledge of marvelous cures, and the universal beneficence of the remedy to those who had used it.

"I have reason to know," said Mrs. McDonald, "something of the worth of this medicine, for it has been demonstrated in my own immediate family. My daughter Kittie is attending high school, and has never been very strong since she began. I suppose she studied hard, and she has quite a distance to go every day. When the smallpox broke out all of the school children had to be vaccinated. I took her over to Dr. Jameson and he vaccinated her. I never saw such an arm in my life and the doctor said he never did. She was broken out on her shoulders and back and was just as sick as she could be. To add to it all neuralgia set in, and the poor child was in misery. She is naturally of a nervous temperament and she suffered most awfully. Even after she recovered the neuralgia did not leave her. Stormy days or days that were damp or preceded a storm, she could not go out at all. She was pale and thin, and had no appetite.

"I have forgotten just who told me about the Pink Pills, but I got some for her and they cured her right up. She has a nice color in her face, eats and sleeps well, goes to school every day, and is well and strong in every particular. I have never heard of anything to build up the blood to compare with Pink Pills. I shall always keep them in the house and recommend them to my neighbors."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are considered an unfailing specific in such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

NEW DISCOVERY IN EGYPT.

Remains of an Unknown Race Who Flourished 5,000 Years Ago.

The report of the discovery by Prof. Flinders Petrie of the remains of a distinctly new race of people in Egypt is by no means startling news to those who have followed at all the series of Egyptological surprises, says the Philadelphia Record. The soil of Egypt probably holds as great if not greater wonders than those already unearthed. While Egypt was not the cradle of mankind, nor even of civilization, its antiquities are of more interest to humanity than those of almost any other country. The Nile witnessed the great secrets of the dawn of the historic world. Of the Egyptians themselves the origin is still wrapped in inscrutable mystery. That they were absolutely distinct from the Ethiopian race has long been known; that the primitive Egyptians were Jewish or even Semitic has not yet been established. As for Prof. Petrie's discovery, it relates to a comparatively later chapter in the romantic history of the land of the lotus and papyrus, of Osiris and the Pyramids.

According to the belief of Prof. Petrie, the strange new people whose bones and relics he has unearthed in the district between Ballas and Negadeh, thirty miles north of Thebes, were most likely the funereal witnesses of the conquerors who overthrew Egyptian civilization at the time of the Old Kingdom and produced the dark ages of the seventh and eighth dynasties. They would thus have flourished near Thebes about 3000 B. C. Their pottery exhibits some peculiar resemblances to that of the Amorite period in Palestine. Again, other evidences point westward to Malta. The prominent aquiline nose and long pointed beard certainly lend more plausibility to the Libyan and Amorite hypothesis. The most striking phase of all, however, is the condition of the remains, which irresistibly suggests ceremonial cannibalism. The absence of all writing, beyond mere personal marks, and the rudeness of the attempt at drawing and sculpture emphasize this feature, while the knowledge evinced of metals does not alter seriously the conviction that the civilization of this dead and long lost race was upon a low level, in strong contrast to Egyptian civilization. As Europe suffered an Asiatic deluge in later history, so it may yet transpire that Egypt was flooded at one time long before by the barbarians of Europe.

AN ALIBI—"Where were you when the assault occurred?" asked the judge of the victim. "Sure'n O'i dun' no', yer honor. He hit me so hard O'i couldn't say."—Harper's Bazar.

"IN MAKING a trip through the Northwest a short time ago, we left the beautiful city of Minneapolis at 6 o'clock in the evening to go to Chicago over 'The North-Western Line,' with a most pleasant ride in view, and it was a most excellent ride, too. We made excellent time, and the tracks being laid so well and kept in such good condition, the travelers did not experience the usual shaking up realized on most roads, and the service I don't think could be any better. Together with the beautiful scenery all along the way, the traveler becomes completely contented, and when at the journey's end feels rested and refreshed, and for comfort or business interests 'The North-Western Line' cannot be excelled."—TRAVELER.

(The above is a voluntary indorsement of the superb service of the "Atlantic Express," via "The North-Western Line," which leaves Minneapolis every evening except Sunday, 6:00; and St. Paul, 6:35.)

In This Work-a-Day World

Brains and nervous systems often give way under the pressure and anxieties of business. Paresis, wasting of the nervous tissues, a sudden and unforeward collapse of the mental and physical faculties are daily occurrences, as the columns of the daily press show. Fortify the system when exhausted against such untoward events with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that most helpful medicine of the weak, worn out and infirm. Use it in rheumatism, dyspepsia, constipation and malaria.

THE hammock is always brought out in the summer, when everyone's experience leads him to suppose that it was built for the fall.—Yonkers Statesman.

Tobacco Tattered and Torn.

Every day we meet the man with shabby clothes, sallow skin and shambling footsteps, holding out a tobacco-palsied hand for the charity quarter. Tobacco destroys manhood and the happiness of perfect vitality. No-To-Bac is guaranteed to cure just such cases, and it's charity to make them try. Sold under guarantee to cure by Druggists everywhere. Book free. Ad. Sterling Remedy Co., New York City or Chicago.

THE man who wrote: "Revolutions never go backward," had never turned a back somersault over the tailboard of a farm wagon.

An Important Difference.

To make it apparent to thousands, who think themselves ill, that they are not affected with any disease, but that the system simply needs cleansing, is to bring comfort home to their hearts, as a costive condition is easily cured by using Syrup of Figs. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

"WHAT is wisdom?" asked a teacher of a class of small girls. A bright-eyed little creature arose and answered: "Information of the brain."

THE letter "e" is like many men. It is first in everything, but ends in smoke.

GREAT BOOK FREE.

When Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., published the first edition of his work, The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, he announced that after 680,000 copies had been sold at the regular price, $1.50 per copy, the profit on which would repay him for the great amount of labor and money expended in producing it, he would distribute the next half million free. As this number of copies has already been sold, he is now distributing, absolutely free, 500,000 copies of this complete, interesting and valuable common sense medical work ever published—the recipient only being required to mail to him, at the above address, this little COUPON with twenty-one (21) cents in one-cent stamps to pay for postage and packing only, and the book will be sent by mail. It is a veritable medical library, complete in one volume. It contains over 1000 pages and more than 300 illustrations. The Free Edition is precisely the same as those sold at $1.50 except only that the books are bound in strong manilla paper covers instead of cloth. Send NOW before all are given away. They are going off rapidly.

quantity or quality, when you buy something to make washing easy? If it's quality, you want Pearline. In effectiveness, in economy, and above all in its absolute harmlessness, no matter how or where you use it, there's nothing to compare with this, the first and only washing-compound.

What difference does the quantity make, after all? If you spend five cents or ten cents or a dollar for an aid to washing, don't you want the thing that will give you the most work, the best work, and the most certain safety for that amount of money? That thing is Pearline.

DELANO DIARY

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—The St. Peter's School opened up for the winter, Monday of last week with three teachers.

—Ten car loads of fine sheep, billed from Benton, Mont., for Chicago, passed through town yesterday.

—Quite a number of Old Soldiers from this neighborhood attended the various reunions in Minneapolis this week.

—The merry-go-round that raked in the nickles here for a couple of weeks left Saturday for the State Fair, to seek greener pastures.

—The Delano Public School begun the fall term on Monday Sept. 8th. The school is as full as usual at this time of year and bids fair to be a grand success this season.

—Squire Billings while in town Saturday informed us that the census was "away off" as he could sit in his office, in Minneapolis, and counting from mmeory, do better. He said he actually counted in this way 964, and thinks we have nothing less than 1,000.

—Adolph Hohl, of Rockford, has our thanks for the largest cabbage head we have seen this year, left at our office last Saturday. Adolph if a 16 to 1 man, that is 16 pounds of sour krout to cabbage head.

—N. K. Coffin is rushing to completion the new Presbyterian Church on the site of the one burned. A bell, the first protestent church bell in the village, is to adorn the structure and call people to services.

—We are informed that Franz Dusa, another one of Delano's old topers, living near town has been sent to St. Peter. It is about time the City Council came down on the selling to drunkards business or their census will be smaller yet.

—At Welker says the Lyndale creamery is panning out well. In Sept. for the first eight days he took from 14 cows 3366 pounds of milk to the creamery, this made on an average 3⅞lbs of butter to the 100lbs of milk; or in all, 126 lbs of butter in 8 days from 14 cows.

—Engineer Ira S. Haines, who is blamed for the terrible accident on the Fergus Falls division, C. H. Vorse informs us, used to board with him here while he was proprietor of the Danthforth House, and Haines was engineer on a construction train with quarters here.

—Rev. Tabor Davies has quite a pointed letter in this issue of the GAZETTE on the evils attendant on the disgraceful procedings following the imbibing of too much Delano whiskey. He for one proposes to wink at such things no longer. They are becoming too frequent and too outrageous for ordinary people to longer stand by and see, without making a protest. If things continue as they have for the present year much longer it will even-treat in wiping out of town every place that sells liquor. If people wish to deal in such disgraceful stuff they must suppress the effects from the general public or public opinion will suppress their business. The incidents mentioned by Mr. Davies are only a few. There might as easily have been a child or a woman or even a habitual drunkard killed as the calf. In fact it is a wonder that there are not more human lives sacrificed than there is through accidents. But so long as the ruling spirit on the village board is a man who openly proclaimed to the public on election day, while runing for councilman that: "I wish there was a saloon open and I would get a drink LAW OR NO LAW" what more can be expected.

—A railroad man says Banker Roosen will have the advantage of his neighbors as he can tunnel out.

—Thomas Shaw has presented the GAZEETTE with several specimens of yellow dent corn raised on his peice of land in town.

—Rev. M. N. Ray, of Litchfield will hold Episcopal services in the Swedish church, Wednesday evening at 7:30, all are invited.

—We are informed that Mayor W. F. Kohler has bought the harness business at Winsted and will move there soon. He has placed his resignation in the hands of A. W. Wittman.

—A windy, wordy war was waged for a long time yesterday afternoon on River Street, between leading "spirits" on the village council. We did not learn to which "place" they adjourned.

—Perhaps if some of our wiseacres could prevail upon the council to have another survey of Crow River they could tell whether or not it would furnish sufficient power to run our water works and electrict light plant. It would be easily figured now while the water is at a low stage.

—Such crowds of Delanoites attended the State Fair this week as to preclude the hope of mentioning them. Suffice to say all enjoyed the trip and were pleased with the exhibits. Such occasions inspire people to striye to surpass others in producing more excellent objects for exhibition.

—Delano Village council meetings are very inharmonious affairs and liable to continue so as long as there is any opposition shown to their old anarchistic Dictator. The best thing for the peace and harmony of the council, and the welfare of the village would be the resignation from the council of Ignatius Gutzwiller, Jr.

—Messrs A. Hanaford, of Monticello, R. S. Holmes; of Albion; and Joe Reems, of Frankfort, with their camping outfit passed through town Wednesday afternoon, on their way to Rockford. They are examining forfeited state lands for re-appraisment. They pronounce Wright County crops excellent; and the weuther hot.

—On Wednesday the sad news of the death of Jerry Emmerson engineer on the Fergus Falls division of the G. N. reached town. A collision between two passenger trains occurred and he had been killed. Jerry was a brother-in-law of J. D. Young of this place, and used to live here. He leaves a son, Archie, and a married daughter, Mrs. Fannie McCoy.

—The river continues to dry up. Our village council should be casting an eye about for a new location for the water supply. While it can hardly be presumed that the Delano water works are depriving the old Crow of its water to such an extent as to threaten its complete annihitation: it certainly is true that if the river should get much lower, we might be short of fluid in case of fire.

—The Delano Eagle is once more under the editorial supervision of its owner, I. Gutzwiler, Jr. What is found in its columns can now be laid at his own door, and he can not hide behind the portly form of Mr Buckley. This weeks issue is a fair sample of what she can do when her editor is so inclined, and is about as poor an advertisement for a village as could well be gotten up.

—The village has had the County Surveyor to plat Wm. Lewis' lots on the cornor of third and bridge streets preparatory to haying them terraced at the expense of the village. If the village is to pay for all damage to property caused by abandoning the grade followed for two decades and adopting the new one which appears to agree with the exalted ideas of some of our present authorities there will be quite a hole in the treasury.

—We understand that a few days ago while passing one of the principle saloons in Delano a lady asked her husband "What kind of a place is that? The Senate! What business do they do there?" The answer promptly came. "Oh, that's where the City Council meets." Another man after passing the same place remarked that "The loudest voice in the Senate was the Mayor's." The beautiful little village deserves better things. But while men who care nothing for law are voted into office such a name must attach to the place as makes respectable citizens blush when they go from home.

—Doctor Catlin don't remember having ever carried a petition to the City Council of Delano, around town for subscribers but once, and that was to have Third Street crossing put in. Although opposed by Judge Fish and laughed at by the President of the council at the time, after canvassing the town thoroughly and donating a days work which he personally gave by digging, in company with Lee Van-Eman Doctor C. B. Ames and possibly others under the supervision of Street Commissioner Joseph Cramer, he had the pleasure of seeing his efforts crowned with success. The Eagle to the contrary notwithstanding.

—Considerable objection is being made to the putting into operation the new grade established by the previous council, and which is claimed to require the moving of too much dirt; and the ultimate flattening out of our beautifully located and naturally well drained village into a level and unpicturesque place. Besides this the new grade requires sidewalks to be hoisted up into the air above the fences of people who have lived in their present homes for nearly a quarter of a century; and who are not just yet ready to give them up to the whims of their neighbors who happen to, at the present time, be in power and wish to have things exactly to their liking.

—Amatuer bicycle riders are beginningto think that horseback riding is prefferable to pedalling a wheel. It seems to us they are correct. Horseback exercise is healthy, graceful, and can be enjoyed many times when a bicycle cannot. Besides the horse can be used with a vehicle of various kinds.

—It may look very nice to the Eagles eyes to have an air line sidewalk from her office to the corner opposite the palacial edifice where her editor eats, and spends a part of the time after the council adjourns; but it will look fully up to the reputation of the most voracious of her species when her editor can strut along above the fence top of the old soldier's widow next door and look smilingly down into the hole in the ground where she used to have a beautiful home, and still would have if the grade plat had not "disappeared?" and a new one been made and figures on the amount below par the depreciated property can be bought for from the lady who already knows something of his financial ability, having invested in a building and loan association, once upon a time, in which he was a stockholder, according to tradition, also.

YOUR FUTURE

IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1894 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE OVER THE DEATH OF FRANK BARNICK.

WHEREAS by a sad and painful accident our late friend and brother Freman Frank Barnick has been removed and taken from our ranks.

Be it resolved that while we bow in submission to the inevitable we mourn the loss of our comrade and sincerely regret that he was so soon separated from us.

He was an honest man, a true comrade and an obedient son. And in his death while so young and full of hope we feel that we have lost a friend and brother whose place can not be filled and that his bereaved parents and relatives have met with a loss that can not be restored.

Resolved that while we too well know that we can do but little to assuage their grief we tender to them our earnest and sincere sympathies in this their sad affliction trusting that time will remove the sting of their sorrow.

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions signed by the Chief and Secretary be presented to the parents of our late comrade and that they be published in our local papers and also spread upon the minutes of our meeting.

WORTH WHILE.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life flows by like a song,
For the man worth while is the one who will smile,
When everything goes dead wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years;
And the smile that is worth the praises of earth
Is the smile that shines through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent
When nothing tempts you to stray,
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away,
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who has no strength for the strife,
The world's highway is cumbered to day;
They make up the items of life,
But the virtue that conquers passion,
And the sorrow that hides in smile,
It is these that are worth the homage of earth
For we find them but once in a while.

LEVI P. MORTON has been put into the Presidential race by New York republicans.

MRS. PERKINS who was before the Hennepin county Grand Jury charged with murdering her sister, for insurance, has been released.

THE supplement to the Minneapolis times, The Northwestern European edition is a paper calculated to attract settlers to this country from the European home where it will be read. Many things important for the intended emigrant to know are explained in the supplement, and the desirability of the Northwest as a home is fully shown.

EVEN among participants in the battle of Birch Coulie there seems to be a disagreement as to who commanded during the fight. Maj. Joseph R. Brown and Capt. Grant both have friends advocating their right to the honor. It looks as if such a thing should be easily settled. As for locating the monument the battle ground is considered the proper place. Correct.

THE Editoral Association is to leave St. Paul, on Saturday Sept. 28, for a trip, via Chicago, Nashville, and Chattanooga to the Cotton Exposition at Atlanta, and to return to St. Paul, Sunday, Oct. 6. This will be one of the nicest excursions ever taken by Minnesota Editors, and give them an opportunety to see a part of the United States many of them have never been in. They will also have a chance to learn from observations something of the cotton business and other southern industries.

THE new editor has two editorials in this weeks paper. One is about ½ of a column long trying to convince the Eagle readers that the GAZETTE is not the best edited paper in the county, the other is "Why Children Tell Lies." The latter editoral is the shorter, and we presume the new editor is better authority on that subject and came to a conclusion sooner. Next week the Old Bird's readers may look out for the long promised article, of the versatile writer, "Why I left the Democrats."

THROUGH some misunderstanding it seems no one was on hand to dedicate the splendid monument to Minnesota's troops on the Chicamauga battle field, on the recent day appointed for that purpose. Why not have this done on the day the Minnesota Editoral Association accompanied by Gov. Clough visits the park? If it has not been otherwise provided for reprecentatives of Minnesota troops could be on hand and have it done then. It hardly seems possible that the dedication did not come off at the proper time, as numbers of Minnesota boys were there.

THE Mayors of Winona and of St. Paul are to be commended for their stand against the resurrection of the ancient curfew law. Mayor Youmans, of Winona, vetoed a bill passed by the council of that city, and Mayor Smith, of St. Paul in an interview is reported as saying. "I regard the ordinance as a silly thing." There would be about as much sense in putting all decent people in jail over Sunday and allowing lawlessness to have full sway. Good respectable children should not be hounded about town every night like so many voracious wild animals. Let laws be observed for larger people and there will not be so much danger on the streets for children.

Editors Day at the Fair.

Saturday the last day of the Fair, was set apart as Editors day. Having been furnished, in common, with others of the profession, with a complimentary ticket we arrived on the grounds in due season, but the people were so thick, and there was so much to look at that we did not run across an editor, that we knew, all day; except in the main building we met H. C. Miller, of the Nicollet County Independent; and, just before leaving, P. V. I. Collins, of the Agriculturist, seated in his cyclorama tent. We can't tell where all the "wes" spent the day.

The Fair was up to former years. Some of the counties, among them Itasca, Aitkin, Blue Earth had very fine displays of what can be grown on their soils. The exhibitions of the soils of several counties, as arranged in glass cases, were nice; and gave a good idea of the country from which it was taken. Horses, cattle and other animals were up to standard. The poultry show, excellent; dairy products were as good as could be found anywhere.

In the afternoon the grand stand was filled with people to see the ball games, races and other amusements. The lady bicycle rider attracted great attention as she sailed out at a lively rate of speed, followed by a horse on the full run; but after getting about half way round the horse passed the female bicyclists, who actually kept right on and did not faint. The lady did not again take the lead, but came trailing in behind. The Kilpatrick family bicycle exhibition was fine. The base ball grounds were as rough as most country cow-pastures, and not what was expected while; the steps for the bicycle were in the way Terra Haute and Minneapolis played a tie game and in the tenth inning the Flour City got one score while the hoosiers didn't,; giving the game to Minneapolis.

There should be some arrangements for preventing smoking in the grand stand, people pay their money to sit there and enjoy the fresh air and see and hear what is before them for exhibition. Many are obliged on account of cigar smokers, to move their seats several times, to get where they will not be made sick by tobacco fumes. This ought not to be necessary. No gentelman would so befoul the air in his neighborhood as to necessitate the hunting of poorer seats by those about him. Of course we are aware that many who claim to be gentleman, smoke. But if they are gentlemen they do so where it does not discommode others. Nearly all women and children and a great many men do not like to sit near a smoker and be obliged to inhale the smoke. Besides there were other things to be seen at the fair but we had not time to see them all; and time and space forbids our mentioning what we did see. There was one thing we overheard which was not to our way of thinking, exactly; one man was endeavoring to have a certain man get a prize, because of the large number of exhibits he had, and on account of the fact that he lived right near, and intended to do so. It might be well to take these things into consideration and other things being equal favor them, but superiority should be first recognized, coming from whatever quarter of the globe; otherwise the annoncements of the fair should so state.

BUFFALO, MINN, SEPT. 18.—Yesterday while Ben Lawrence was hauling logs, his four year-old son got under the wheelc and was internally injured, and lived but one hour after the accident.—Globe.

Among Our Exchanges.

There are many persons of estimable private life, who would scorn to say that they had just met on the street a green giraffe talking in Choctaw with a buff monkey adorned with seven red tails, and who will nevertheless tell you that the recovery of business is due to an election that hapened nearly a year ago and can effect no legislation for two or three years to come.—St. Paul Globe.

A great lesson that was taught is that this year there were no liquors sold, no pool selling allowed, no shell games, wheels of fortune, ect., yet the fair was even a greater success than when these evils flourished there. It was proved that we can easily get along without them and that they are not necessary to make a fair a success. The board is, however, alive to the importance of securing legitimate amusements both in abundance and variety, and the success of the fair this year will enable the board to furnish them in even greater abundance another year.—Globe.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13, 1895

Democrats here are unanimously of the opinion that Senator Sherman did the Democratic party, not only in Ohio but through the country, a great favor when he lugged the tariff in as an issue. Those who occupy positions which enable them to speak with authority, say that with the tarriff for an issue in Ohio, the election of a Democratic legislature is certainty and that of Governor Campbell extremely probable. It is hoped that Sherman, McKinley and Foraker, whose recent speeches are to be distributed as Democratic campaign documents in Ohio, will succeede in their announced intention to make the tariff an issue in the national campaign. The prospects for the election of a Democratic President next year have been steadily growing brighter for some time, but with the Republicans committed to the restoration of McKinleyism, they would become dazzlingly brilliant. The sentiment of the country is overwhelmingly in favor of the Democratic idea of a low tariff and against the Chinese wall which McKinleyism built around the commerce of the United States. This has been shown at more than one Congressional election and it was shown in the enormous majority by which President Cleveland was elected the last time, when the tariff was the predominating issue. The principal object these Ohio Republicans have in view is doubtless to compel their party to nominate McKinley by making McKinleyism the issue, as it is well known that Tom Read and his friends have been specially desirous to allow the tariff issue to remain in the background in the Presidential campaign.

At a meeting in the Ohio State Democratic Association held here this week a letter was read from Governor Campbell, which created much enthusiasm. Gov. Campbell said that he intended to make a vigorous and aggressive campaign and expressed the opinion that the result at the polls would largely depend upon the loyalty and activity of Democrats. Members of the Association say that it will be no fault of theirs if every Ohio Democratic voter temporarily residing in Washington, does not go home and vote for Campbell, and every man of them believes that Campbell's luck is going to pull him through.

Secretary Carlisle has set the 20th inst. to hear arguments in the appeal from the decision of Comptroller Bowler in the sugar bounty cases. Ex-Senator Manderson, counsel for the Nebraska beet sugar men, takes the ground that Bowler's action in citing the claims was illegal.

The opinion of Senator Mills, of Texas, on the silver question, which was made public just before he left for home, after having spent the summer in Washington supposedly engaged in literary work, has been generally regarded as a silver man. His conversion to "sound money" has greatly pleased the administration men, who say that his letter definding and defending his position will be of the greatest value to the "sound money" Democrats of Texas. Needless to say the silver Democrats do not take that view of it.

On the 29th of this month there will be a change in the commander of the United States Army. On that day Lieut. Gen Schofield will reach the age limit for retirement and one of the major generals will be named as commander of the army. There will be no promotions on the account of the change, as the grade of lieutenant general ceases to exist upon the retirement of Gen. Schofield. Gen. Nelson A. Miles is the senior major general, but his selection as the cammander is not regarded as certain. The Prsident can if he desires, select one of the other major generals.

Secretary Lamont went to Gray Gables this week to see President Cleveland, and, although the Secretary said his visit had no political significance, it is safe to say that their conversation was not confined to the health of Baby Marion and other family maters. There are several other subjects upon which they probably had to much to say to each other, and a stenographic report of what they did say would unquestionably be interest ing.

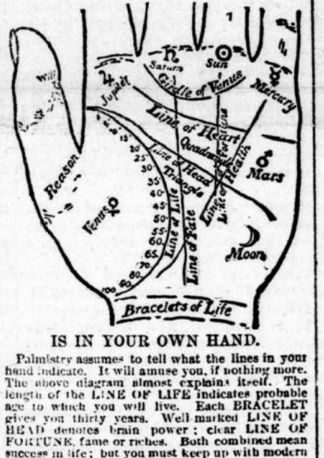
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many articles to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked: keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1896 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; large FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

His Friend John.

He was having his fortune told.

"I see," said the medium, "I see the name of JOHN."

"Yes," said the sitter.

"The name seems to have given you a great deal of trouble."

"It has."

"This JOHN is an intimate friend."

That's so."

"And often leads you to do things you are sorry for."

"True."

"His influence over you is bad."

"Right again."

"But you will soon htve a quarrel."

"I'm glad of that. NOW SPELL OUT HIS WHOLE NAME."

The "MEJUM" wrote some cabalistic words and handed to him.

"Do not read until you are at home," she said, solemnly. "IT IS YOUR FRIEND'S WHOLE NAME."

When he reached home he lit the gas and read in picket-fence characters the name of his friend "DEMI-JOHN!"—Detroit Free Press.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.

Square Type.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the other sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and it will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put it in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

WORTH WHILE.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
While life flows by like a song,
For the man worth while is the one who will smile,
When everything goes dead wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years;
And the smile that is worth the praises of earth
Is the smile that shines through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent
When nothing tempts you to stray,
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away.
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who has no strength for the strife,
The world's highway is cumbered to day:
They make up the items of life.
But the virtue that conquers passion,
And the sorrow that hides in smile,
It is these that are worth the homage of earth
For we find them but once in a while.

LEVI P. MORTON has been put into the Presidential race by New York republicans.

MRS. PERKINS who was before the Hennepin county Grand Jury charged with murdering her sister, for insurance, has been released.

THE supplement to the Minneapolis times, The Northwestern European edition is a paper calculated to attract settlers to this country from the European home where it will be read. Many things important for the intended emigrant to know are explained in the supplement, and the desirability of the Northwest as a home is fully shown.

EVEN among participants in the battle of Birch Coulie there seems to be a disagreement as to who commanded during the fight. Maj. Joseph R. Brown and Capt. Grant both have friends advocating their right to the honor. It looks as if such a thing should be easily settled. As for locating the monument the battle ground is considered the proper place. Correct.

THE Editoral Association is to leave St. Paul, on Saturday Sept. 28, for a trip, via Chicago, Nashville, and Chattanooga to the Cotton Exposition at Atlanta, and to return to St. Paul, Sunday, Oct. 6. This will be one of the nicest excursions ever taken by Minnesota Editors, and give them an opportunety to see a part of the United States many of them have never been in. They will also have a chance to learn from observations something of the cotton business and other southern industries.

THE new editor has two editorials in this weeks paper. One is about ½ of a column long trying to convince the Eagle readers that the GAZETTE is not the best edited paper in the county, the other is "Why Children Tell Lies." The latter editoral is the shorter, and we presume the new editor is better authority on that subject and came to a conclusion sooner. Next week the Old Bird's readers may look out for the long promised article, of the versatile writer, "Why I left the Democrats."

THROUGH some misunderstanding it seems no one was on hand to dedicate the splendid monument to Minnesota's troops on the Chicamauga battle field, on the recent day appointed for that purpose. Why not have this done on the day the Minnesota Editoral Association accompanied by Gov. Clough visits the park? If it has not been otherwise provided for reprecentatives of Minnesota troops could be on hand and have it done then. It hardly seems possible that the dedication did not come off at the proper time, as numbers of Minnesota boys were there.

THE Mayors of Winona and of St. Paul are to be commended for their stand against the resurrection of the ancient curfew law. Mayor Youmans, of Winona, vetoed a bill passed by the council of that city, and Mayor Smith, of St. Paul in an interview is reported as saying. "I regard the ordinance as a silly thing." There would be about as much sense in putting all decent people in jail over Sunday and allowing lawlessness to have full sway. Good respectable children should not be hounded about town every night like so many voracious wild animals. Let laws be observed for larger people and there will not be so much danger on the streets for children.

Editors Day at the Fair.

Saturday the last day of the Fair, was set apart as Editors day. Having been furnished, in common, with others of the profession, with a complimentary ticket we arrived on the grounds in due season, but the people were so thick, and there was so much to look at that we did not run across an editor, that we knew, all day; except in the main building we met H. C. Miller, of the Nicollet County Independent; and, just before leaving, P. V. I. Collins, of the Agriculturist, seated in his cyclorama tent. We can't tell where all the "wes" spent the day.

The Fair was up to former years. Some of the counties, among them Itasca, Aitkin, Blue Earth had very fine displays of what can be grown on their soils. The exhibitions of the soils of several counties, as arranged in glass cases, were nice; and gave a good idea of the country from which it was taken. Horses, cattle and other animals were up to standard. The poultry show, excellent; dairy products were as good as could be found anywhere.

In the afternoon the grand stand was filled with people to see the ball games, races and other amusements. The lady bicycle rider attracted great attention as she sailed out at a lively rate of speed, followed by a horse on the full run; but after getting about half way round the horse passed the female bicyclists, who actually kept right on and did not faint. The lady did not again take the lead, but came trailing in behind. The Kilpatrick family bicycle exhibition was fine. The base ball grounds were as rough as most country cow-pastures, and not what was expected while; the steps for the bicycle were in the way Terra Haute and Minneapolis played a tie game and in the tenth inning the Flour City got one score while the hoosiers didn't,; giving the game to Minneapolis.

There should be some arrangements for preventing smoking in the grand stand, people pay their money to sit there and enjoy the fresh air and see and hear what is before them for exhibition. Many are obliged on account of cigar smokers, to move their seats several times, to get where they will not be made sick by tobacco fumes. This ought not to be necessary. No gentleman would so befoul the air in his neighborhood as to necessitate the hunting of poorer seats by those about him. Of course we are aware that many who claim to be gentleman, smoke. But if they are gentlemen they do so where it does not discommode others. Nearly all women and children and a great many men do not like to sit near a smoker and be obliged to inhale the smoke. Besides there were other things to be seen at the fair but we had not time to see them all; and time and space forbids our mentioning what we did see. There was one thing we overheard which was not to our way of thinking, exactly; one man was endeavoring to have a certain man get a prize, because of the large number of exhibits he had, and on account of the fact that he lived right hear, and intended to do so. It might be well to take these things into consideration and other things being equal favor them, but superiority should be first recognized, coming from whatever quarter of the globe; otherwise the announcements of the fair should so state.

BUFFALO, MINN, SEPT. 18.—Yesterday while Ben Lawrence was hauling logs, his four year-old son got under the wheelc and was internally injured, and lived but one hour after the accident.—Globe.

Among Our Exchanges.

There are many persons of estimable private life, who would scorn to say that they had just met on the street a green giraffe talking in Choctaw with a buff monkey adorned with seven red tails, and who will nevertheless tell you that the recovery of business is due to an election that hapened nearly a year ago and can effect no legislation for two or three years to come.—St. Paul Globe.

A great lesson that was taught is that this year there were no liquors sold, no pool selling allowed, no shell games, wheels of fortune, ect., yet the fair was even a greater success than when these evils flourished there. It was proved that we can easily get along without them and that they are not necessary to make a fair a success. The board is, however, alive to the importance of securing legitimate amusements both in abundance and variety, and the success of the fair this year will enable the board to furnish them in even greater abundance another year.—Globe.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13, 1895

Democrats here are unanimously of the opinion that Senator Sherman did the Democratic party, not only in Ohio but through the country, a great favor when he lugged the tariff in as an issue. Those who occupy positions which enable them to speak with authority, say that with the tarriff for an issue in Ohio, the election of a Democratic legislature is certainty and that of Governor Campbell extremely probable. It is hoped that Sherman, McKinley and Foraker, whose recent speeches are to be distributed as Democratic campaign documents in Ohio, will succeede in their announced intention to make the tariff an issue in the national campaign. The prospects for the election of a Democratic President next year have been steadily growing brighter for some time, but with the Republicans committed to the restoration of McKinleyism, they would become dazzlingly brilliant. The sentiment of the country is overwhelmingly in favor of the Democratic idea of a low tariff and against the Chinese wall which McKinleyism built around the commerce of the United States. This has been shown at more than one Congressional election and it was shown in the enormous majority by which President Cleveland was elected the last time, when the tariff was the predominating issue. The principal object these Ohio Republicans have in view is doubtless to compel their party to nominate McKinley by making McKinleyism the issue, as it is well known that Tom Read and his friends have been specially desirous to allow the tariff issue to remain in the background in the Presidential campaign.

At a meeting in the Ohio State Democratic Association held here this week a letter was read from Governor Campbell, which created much enthusiasm. Gov. Campbell said that he intended to make a vigorous and aggressive campaign and expressed the opinion that the result at the polls would largely depend upon the loyalty and activity of Democrats. Members of the Association say that it will be no fault of theirs if every Ohio Democratic voter temporarily residing in Washington, does not go home and vote for Campbell, and every man of them believes that Campbell's luck is going to pull him through.

Secretary Carlisle has set the 20th inst. to hear arguments in the appeal from the decision of Comptroller Bowler in the sugar bounty cases. Ex-Senator Manderson, counsel for the Nebraska beet sugar men, takes the ground that Bowler's action in citing the claims was illegal.

The opinion of Senator Mills, of Texas, on the silver question, which was made public just before he left for home, after having spent the summer in Washington supposedly engaged in literary work, has been generally regarded as a silver man. His conversion to "sound money" has greatly pleased the administration men, who say that his letter defending and defending his position will be of the greatest value to the "sound money" Democrats of Texas. Needless to say the silver Democrats do not take that view of it.

On the 29th of this month there will be a change in the commander of the United States Army. On that day Lieut. Gen Schofield will reach the age limit for retirement and one of the major generals will be named as commander of the army. There will be no promotions on the account of the change, as the grade of lieutenant general ceases to exist upon the retirement of Gen. Schofield. Gen. Nelson A. Miles is the senior major general, but his selection as the cammander is not regarded as certain. The Prsident can if he desires, select one of the other major generals.

Secretary Lamont went to Gray Gables this week to see President Cleveland, and, although the Secretary said his visit had no political significance, it is safe to say that their conversation was not confined to the health of Baby Marion and other family maters. There are several other subjects upon which they probably had to much to say to each other, and a stenographic report of what they did say would unquestionably be interesting.

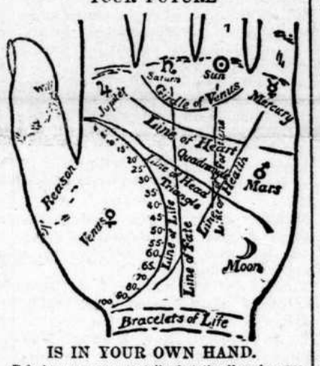
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well-defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1896 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $1,000; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
Square Type.
Spatulated.
Conical.
Philosophic.
Artistic.
Feminine.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished upon the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the other sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and it will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put it in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

His Friend John.

He was having his fortune told.

"I see," said the medium, "I see the name of JOHN."

"Yes," said the sitter.

"The name seems to have given you a great deal of trouble."

"It has."

"This JOHN is an intimate friend."

That's so."

"And often leads you to do things you are sorry for."

"True."

"His influence over you is bad."

"Right again."

"But you will soon htve a quarrel."

"I'm glad of that. NOW SPELL OUT HIS WHOLE NAME."

The "MEJUM" wrote some cabalistic words and handed to him.

"Do not read until you are at home," she said, solemnly. "IT IS YOUR FRIEND'S WHOLE NAME."

When he reached home he lit the gas and read in picket-fence characters the name of his friend "DEMI-JOHN!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE statement that Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Burnett have both decided to quit supporting their husbands gives rise to the fear that it may be a rough winter on the new man.

DID you ever stop to think that the reason it is almost impossible to convict a rich man of crime in this country may be because by the time his lawyers get through with him there isn't any rich man to convict?

PERHAPS it may have been forgotten that during the four years of the civil war there were 167 pitched battles, 102 combats involving the presence of a number of regiments on each side, and 362 skirmishes, sieges and other actions.

THE prefix of "madam" as a title of respect to gentlewomen came into use in England during the reign of Charles II., and was doubtless of French origin. As far as known, the first use of the title appeared in the English parish register in 1690.

IT is said that once, shortly before the war, the patent office did inadvertently grant a patent for a perpetual motion machine; but this is the only case of the sort on file, and the model thereof has never worked any better than its successors.

THIS is the way they do in Denmark: The cattle, sheep and swine have to undergo a rigid veterinary examination both before and after they are slaughtered. Before meat can be removed from the slaughter house it must be officially stamped as "first or second-class food."

UNCLE SAM is making more "imported cigars" than ever before. During the fiscal year which closed June 30, over 4,130,440,000 cigars were manufactured in the United States. This is an increase of 63,522,000 over the number manufactured during the previous year. Cuba had better settle her squabble, or she will lose a lot of business.

THE intention of Japan to have several battleships built in this country is a matter of congratulation, as it shows that the advancement in American ship building is appreciated in other countries. Ten years ago Japan would have gone to England for her ships, but the wise policy which inaugurated the building up of our navy gave a stimulus to American ship building in general.

THE village of New Gloucester, Me., enjoys an exceptional freedom from the small vices which often flourish with great vigor in small places. None of its officials drink, swear, use tobacco or break the Sabbath, and at the railway station for two years only two tickets for Sunday excursions were sold in each year, and in two later years but four similar tickets a year were purchased.

A BICYCLE manufacturing firm in New England is constructing a machine for Princess Maud of Wales that is to be one of the handsomest products of the wheeling craze. It will be silver mounted, and the appointments will be all of the richest character. A special messenger will accompany the bicycle to England whose duty it will be to see that the princess receives the machine unin jured.

A HISTORICAL society in Ohio has set an example which the people of other towns might do well to follow. The society has erected several historical stones and tablets commemorative of events of importance which occurred in the vicinity of the town. There are hundreds of towns in all parts of the country, and particularly in the east, which could in some such manner indicate the location of historic events. The expense would be trifling, compared with the benefit derived.

LOUIS BEACH, 88 years old, died at his home in New York from injuries received three weeks ago when he was run over by a baker's wagon. Louis and his brother Lucius had the distinction of being the oldest twins in the United States and many touching incidents are related of them. Since childhood the brothers had been inseparable. Nearly every morning for fifteen years the brothers, both doubled by age, could be seen walking down Broadway to their business. It is said that an accident or sickness of one always directly affected the other.

MARY ANDERSON'S reminiscences of her life on the stage, and her impressions through her professional career, which will soon be forthcoming, should be read by all stage-struck young women. If a woman of such genius as "Our Mary," and one who has achieved the wonderful success before the footlights that she did, can look back and unhesitatingly and emphatically say, as she does, that the day she voluntarily left the stage with all its triumphs and honors, for she certainly won them, was the happiest of her life, what can other who tread the boards expect?

THE remarkably quick run of a passenger train from New York to Buffalo, a distance of 436½ miles, in 407 minutes, suggests the improvement of road beds during the past ten years. American rolling stock long has been able to hold its own in competition with that of Great Britain, but American road beds have been more rapidly and more cheaply, and consequently less thoroughly, built than those of the old countries. But of late much has been done toward improvement—trestles have given way to stone-built viaducts, ties and rails of the best quality have been substituted.

AT CHICKAMAGUA.

Dedication Ceremonies Begun at the National Military Park.

The Greatest Military Pageant of the Times Inaugurated—Ex-Confederates and Ex-Federals Help Maintain the Order.

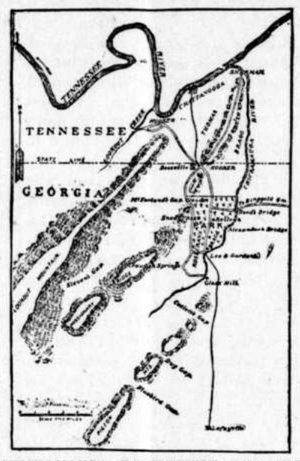
CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 19.—[Special Dispatch.]—The first day of the dedication ceremonies has dawned on a crowded and gaily caparisoned city. The feeling that she is witnessing the greatest military pageant of the times pervades Chattanooga; martial strains make the air redolent, and the 5,506 acres which comprise the great national military park are for the first time in thirty-two years in the possession of the blue and the grey. Daniel S. Lamont, whose administration is made famous by these celebrations, is here accompanied by Vice President Adlai F. Stevenson, and senatorial and congressional representations from nearly every state in the union. As at the destructive battle of Chickamauga, the northwest is handsomely represented. The governors of more than a score of states are present with their staffs, and some of them are camping on the battle grounds. Five observation towers, seventy feet high, have been erected by the government, two on Missionary Ridge and three on Chickamauga field. Underneath a towering one on Snodgrass Hill, the very spot where Thomas gained the soubriquet of "Rock of Chickamauga," the dedicatory exercises were opened to-day at noon, Gen. John M. Palmer,



CHICKAMAUGA BATTLEFIELD AND SURROUNDINGS.

of Illinois, and John B. Gordon, of Georgia, delivering fervid, eloquent orations, while a great wave of humanity surged and struggled close by.

Over 800 United State troops, under the command of Col. Poland, of Columbus, are present to add luster to the brilliant scene and enforce law and order. Confederate veterans are camping on confederate lines and federals on the opposite fields. Reunions in plenty were held this evening, a great confederate one occuring on the old fighting ground near the blacksmith shop spoken of in Longstreet's report. Gens. Longstreet and Wallace are here, and their presence is the incentive for wild hurrahing from their forces. Business meetings are being held in the Chattanooga courthouse. Gen. J. S. Fullerton is grand marshal of the occasion. Park guardians, ex-confederates and ex-federals, assist the troops in maintaining order.

Visitors, as a rule, are doing Chickamauga as in '63, taking first the confederate lines near Thedford house, where Bragg had first planned to whip the enemy, but in which he was foiled by the night march of the federals, and following the fight till the nightfall of the 20th. The field is intensely interesting thus taken, and by aid of the markers, monuments and cannon, it is easily done. Ohio has fifty-nine monuments; Minnesota, five; Illinois, thirty-six; Massachusetts, one; Michigan, eleven; Missouri, three monuments and eighteen markers; Wisconsin, nine; Pennsylvania, nine; United States regulars, nine. The confederate monuments have not yet been placed. This, however, has not dampened southern ardor, for from every state in Dixie crowds have come.

MONUMENT TO REGULAR U. S. CAVALRY.

The annual reunion of the Army of the Cumberland was held last evening, 18th., with Gen. Charles H Manderson, the silver-tongued Nebraskan, as orator. The Army of the Tennessee was present and the scene was an inspiring one.

Philadelphia Voters.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 14.—The total number of votes in this city, as shown by the assessors' returns, is 291,256, an increase of 5,868 over the corresponding assessment last year.

TONE OF TRADE.

The Business Situation as Viewed by the Agencies.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"A slight set-back which may mean much or nothing, according to the final outcome of the crops, is not unexpected at this season. If the government crop reports were correct, the situation would not be encouraging. But not much confidence is placed in the reduced estimate of corn, none at all in the estimate of wheat, and even the most enthusiastic bulls do not think it worth while to quote the government report as to cotton. The fact is that we are beginning to market not far from 2,200,000,000 bushels of corn, though only about 500,000,-000 bushels will be moved from the counties where it is grown: about 450,000,000 bushels of wheat, of which the farmers are unwisely holding back a large proportion; and about 7,200,000 bales of cotton, if the later indications are not erroneous, as they very easily may be, to add to the stocks carried over.

"The wheat crop is evidently larger than the department has estimated, though nobody knows how much larger, and is coming forward with more encouraging rapidity, no less than 5,773,173 bushels having been received at western ports, against 5,443,001 bushels for the same week last year, from a much larger crop. The price declined sharply, about 2 cents per bushel, with little indication of recovery. The price of corn has also yielded with a strong prospect of the largest crop ever grown, and at 38 cents at New York a large proportion of the crop will be of little profit to farmers.

"The failures during four weeks of August amounted to $8,121,503, of which $3,863,396 were of manufacturing and $4,103,804 of trading concerns; but for the first week of September the aggregate was $1,495,677, of which $655,643 were of manufacturing and $755,534 of trading concerns. Failures for the week were 187 in the United States, against 219 last year, and 34 in Canada, against 44 last year."

Bradstreet's says:

"The week is characterized in trade circles by an unexpected, but no less pronounced, improvement south and southwest. This is reflected at markets from which supplies are distributed to these regions. Relatively unfavorable features are found in a quieter tone in dry goods jobbing circles; a check to seasonable trade throughout the central west, due to the unusual heat; low prices for men's wear woolens, and an unsatisfactory outlook, due to depressed quotations abroad; only moderate orders for domestic woolen manufactures; cancellation of a few Nebraska general merchandise orders at Chicago, and the somewhat critical position of the American tin plate industry, owing to the heavy advance in price of tin plate bars, without a corresponding increase in the price of tin plate."

THE MORA CLAIM SETTLED.

United States State Department Receives a Draft for $1,459,000.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—After more than twenty years of controversy, which several times threatened to bring about strained relations between Spain and the United States, a draft for the amount of the indemnity demanded by this government for the confiscation of the Cuban estates of Antonio Maxima Mora, a naturalized American citizen, was delivered Saturday by Senor Depuy de Lome, the Spanish minister, to Mr. Adee, the acting secretary of state. All that remains for the final settlement of the claim will be the arrangement of the assignments made by Mr. Mora to creditors and the delivery to him of the residue.

There was no ceremony about the culminating act on the part of Spain. Senor de Lome appeared at the state department a few minutes after noon and was immediately shown into the office of Mr. Adee. He handed to the latter a draft, signed by himself, on the London financial agent of the Spanish government for £295,412, 16s, 11d, the equivalent of $1,449,000, or 1,500,000 Spanish pesos, and Mr. Adee delivered in return a formal receipt for the amount signed by himself as acting secretary of state.

[The payment of this claim ends a long international dispute between Spain and the United States. It arose from the occupation by Spanish troops many years ago of a Cuban plantation owned by the Moras, who were American citizens. The troops did enormous damage and the estate was held by the Spanish authorities for a long time. Spain long ago admitted the justice of the claim for damages, but always managed to avoid payment of it. Finally Secretary Olney took it in hand and enforced its payment. The greater part of the money was assigned long ago to various Americans, among them Nathaniel Paige, principal counsel for the claimants, and Charles F. Flint, chief proprietor of the New York Times, who is said to own one-half of the entire claim.]

GUNBOATS TO THE SCENE.

Penalties Imposed on Leaders in Chinese Riots Will Be Enforced.

FOO CHOW, Sept. 17.—In consequence of the attitude of obstruction assumed by the Chinese officials toward the progress of the inquiry into the recent outrages at Ku Cheng and their refusal to carry out the sentences imposed by the examining court upon the ringleaders in the attacks upon the Christian missions at that place, two gunboats have been ordered to ascend the river to demand the enforcement of the penalties imposed. A rebellion has begun in the province of Fo Kien and the local officials, instead of attempting to suppress the rising, have fled. A force of imperial troops are on their way to the scene to try to put down the insurrection.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Shanghai saying that the Chinese regard the inquiry into the massacre of Christians at Kucheng as a mockery, and have begun to release the prisoners without consulting the British consul.

A Fabrication.

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras, via Galveston, Sept. 17.—The statement that an earthquake had occurred on last Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, with a loss of 300 lives and causing destruction of a church and dwellings, is without foundation so far as is known in Tegucigalpa. No such earthquake has been heard of here and the statements made in the supposed dispatch are false in detail.

DEFENDER WINS.

America's Cup Will Stay on This Side of the Water.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—The regatta committee of the New York Yacht club reached a decision late Wednesday afternoon in the Defender protest matter, giving the race to the American boat. Lord Dunraven accepts the decision, although he holds that his boat was crowded by the Defender, and that the accident was unavoidable. He said: "I believe in the ability and honesty of the regatta committee of the New York Yacht club. I believe that no effort has been made to influence their decision. . . . While it is very certain that the America's cup is lost by reason of the Valkyrie's racing showing, it is by no means certain that at some time the cup may not be carried across the Atlantic."

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—The America's cup races ended in a fiasco. Lord Dunraven withdrew the Valkyrie immediately after the start and the Defender sailed over the course alone. The America's cup committee notified C. Oliver Iselin that three races and the cup were awarded the gallant Defender, and the crowds afloat and ashore cheered the ship that sustained Uncle Sam's supremacy on the seas, and the skipper and crew that sailed her. For at least another year the international trophy is ours, and in all probability it will be many years before a British yacht again challenges for the cup. The mishap of last Tuesday and the rather remarkable action of Lord Dunraven Thursday will not further the interests of international sport. Americans have complained of not being given fair play when racing in English waters, and both in 1893 and this year extra pains have been taken to prevent his lordship from having cause to complain of unfairness here. In withdrawing he does not charge any special unfairness to his boat, but bases his action upon the interference with both yachts caused by the large excursion fleet. The trouble was not caused Thursday, for the course was clear at the start when the British boat withdrew. The objections raised by the owner of the Valkyrie were made before the boats reached the line, and based upon the conduct of the attendant fleet on Saturday and Tuesday. Lord Dunraven sent the America's cup committee a strongly worded letter complaining about the action of steamboats and tugs, and stating that he was not willing to continue racing the Valkyrie unless a clear course was provided. He added that in his opinion the course should be distant from any large city.

Up to the time for the start for Thursday's race, Lord Dunraven had received no reply to his communication. After his withdrawal from the race, he said it was his intention to start if he received a reply, but none coming to hand he merely went down and crossed the line, to give the other boat a chance to make the race.

The Defender, with spinnaker and balloon drawing well, proceeded on the course alone, finishing in good racing style. The America's cup will remain on this side of the water this year.

Defender crossed the line at 11:30:24.
Made the first turn at 1:26:58.
Crossed the finish line at 4:04:46.
Time of the Defender over the course, 4:43:43: official.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

Heavy Withdrawals for Shipment Abroad Create an Uneasy Feeling.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—The chief topic of discussion in financial circles has been the surprisingly heavy gold engagements for shipment by Saturday's steamers. The actual engagements amounted to over $5,000,000. The sudden engagement of $2,500,000 in gold by Lazzard Freres & Co., who have been accounted leading members of the government bond syndicate, made a general impression that the syndicate which has stood between the treasury and the gold exporters had been disrupted. J. Pierpont Morgan, the head of the syndicate, specifically denied this. The syndicate says that all its obligations to the government were fulfilled in June last and that there is no agreement to maintain the reserve at the $100,000,000 mark until October, but that since last June they have voluntarily put gold into the treasury to maintain its reserve and would continue to do so even up to the 1st of January if necessary, and if existing conditions make it feasible. Experts explain the steady drain upon the treasury's gold by the backwardness of the cotton and corn crops. In a few weeks, it is predicted, there will be an abundance of commercial bills in the market and the pressure will be relieved.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—The treasury general balance is $181,962,000, of which $99,568,000 is in gold. The deficit so far this fiscal year is $14,-000,000, and with the revenues running at the present figures this deficit by January 1 next will approximate $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. The amount realized by the three bond issues made within the past two years exceeds by only $6,000,000 the total treasury balance, so without those issues there would now be an empty treasury. With a full treasury of course it follows that gold can always be had, but with a treasury depleted by expenditures exceeding the revenues, and with the tide of commercial exchange against us, gold is difficult to retain in the treasury.

WANT THEIR PAY FIRST.

Captors of Another Insurance Swindler Ready to Deliver Him.

TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 16.—John W. Hillmon, who held policies aggregating $25,000 in the New York Life Mutual, of New York, and Connecticut Mutual, and who was supposed to have been killed near Medicine Lodge, March 17, 1879, has been found finally. Charles M. Foulkes, general claim agent of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway, and C. W. Ryus, his assistant, claim that they have located him in either Arizona or New Mexico and that they are prepared to produce him and establish his identity whenever the companies will make a deposit of $10,000 to be paid after they have filled their part of the contract. The proposition was submitted some time ago, but it has not yet been either accepted or rejected.

Sons of Veterans.

Every state division with the exception of Colorado, California and Oregon is represented. Three thousand visitors are in attendance.

THE statement that Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Burnett have both decided to quit supporting their husbands gives rise to the fear that it may be a rough winter on the new man.

DID you ever stop to think that the reason it is almost impossible to convict a rich man of crime in this country may be because by the time his lawyers get through with him there isn't any rich man to convict?

PERHAPS it may have been forgotten that during the four years of the civil war there were 167 pitched battles, 102 combats involving the presence of a number of regiments on each side, and 362 skirmishes, sieges and other actions.

THE prefix of "madam" as a title of respect to gentlewomen came into use in England during the reign of Charles II., and was doubtless of French origin. As far as known, the first use of the title appeared in the English parish register in 1690.

IT is said that once, shortly before the war, the patent office did inadvertently grant a patent for a perpetual motion machine; but this is the only case of the sort on file, and the model thereof has never worked any better than its successors.

THIS is the way they do in Denmark: The cattle, sheep and swine have to undergo a rigid veterinary examination both before and after they are slaughtered. Before meat can be removed from the slaughter house it must be officially stamped as "first or second-class food."

UNCLE SAM is making more "imported cigars" than ever before. During the fiscal year which closed June 30, over 4,130,440,000 cigars were manufactured in the United States. This is an increase of 63,522,000 over the number manufactured during the previous year. Cuba had better settle her squabble, or she will lose a lot of business.

THE intention of Japan to have several battleships built in this country is a matter of congratulation, as it shows that the advancement in American ship building is appreciated in other countries. Ten years ago Japan would have gone to England for her ships, but the wise policy which inaugurated the building up of our navy gave a stimulus to American ship building in general.

THE village of New Gloucester, Me., enjoys an exceptional freedom from the small vices which often flourish with great vigor in small places. None of its officials drink, swear, use tobacco or break the Sabbath, and at the railway station for two years only two tickets for Sunday excursions were sold in each year, and in two later years but four similar tickets a year were purchased.

A HISTORICAL society in Ohio has set an example which the people of other towns might do well to follow. The society has erected several historical stones and tablets commemorative of events of importance which occurred in the vicinity of the town. There are hundreds of towns in all parts of the country, and particularly in the east, which could in some such manner indicate the location of historic events. The expense would be trifling, compared with the benefit derived.

LOUIS BEACH, 88 years old, died at his home in New York from injuries received three weeks ago when he was run over by a baker's wagon. Louis and his brother Lucius had the distinction of being the oldest twins in the United States and many touching incidents are related of them. Since childhood the brothers had been inseparable. Nearly every morning for fifteen years the brothers, both doubled by age, could be seen walking down Broadway to their business. It is said that an accident or sickness of one always directly affected the other.

MARY ANDERSON'S reminiscences of her life on the stage, and her impressions through her professional career, which will soon be forthcoming, should be read by all stage-struck young women. If a woman of such genius as "Our Mary," and one who has achieved the wonderful success before the footlights that she did, can look back and unhesitatingly and emphatically say, as she does, that the day she voluntarily left the stage with all its triumphs and honors, for she certainly won them, was the happiest of her life, what can other who tread the boards expect?

THE remarkably quick run of a passenger train from New York to Buffalo, a distance of 436¼ miles, in 407 minutes, suggests the improvement of road beds during the past ten years. American rolling stock long has been able to hold its own in competition with that of Great Britain, but American road beds have been more rapidly and more cheaply, and consequently less thoroughly, built than those of the old countries. But of late much has been done toward improvement—trestles have given way to stone-built viaducts, ties and rails of the best quality have been substituted.

AT CHICKAMAGUA.

Dedication Ceremonies Begun at the National Military Park.

The Greatest Military Pageant of the Times Inaugurated—Ex-Confederates and Ex-Federals Help Maintain the Order.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 19.—[Special Dispatch.]—The first day of the dedication ceremonies has dawned on a crowded and gaily caparisoned city. The feeling that she is witnessing the greatest military pageant of the times pervades Chattanooga; martial strains make the air redolent, and the 5,506 acres which comprise the great national military park are for the first time in thirty-two years in the possession of the blue and the grey. Daniel S. Lamont, whose administration is made famous by these celebrations, is here accompanied by Vice President Adlai F. Stevenson, and senatorial and congressional representations from nearly every state in the union. As at the destructive battle of Chickamauga, the northwest is handsomely represented. The governors of more than a score of states are present with their staffs, and some of them are camping on the battle grounds. Five observation towers, seventy feet high, have been erected by the government, two on Missionary Ridge and three on Chickamauga field. Underneath a towering one on Snodgrass Hill, the very spot where Thomas gained the soubriquet of "Rock of Chickamauga," the dedicatory exercises were opened to-day at noon, Gen. John M. Palmer, of Illinois, and John B. Gordon, of Georgia, delivering fervid, eloquent orations, while a great wave of humanity surged and struggled close by.

CHICKAMAUGA BATTLEFIELD AND SURROUNDINGS.

Over 800 United State troops, under the command of Col. Poland, of Columbus, are present to add luster to the brilliant scene and enforce law and order. Confederate veterans are camping on confederate lines and federals on the opposite fields. Reunions in plenty were held this evening, a great confederate one occuring on the old fighting ground near the blacksmith shop spoken of in Longstreet's report. Gens. Longstreet and Wallace are here, and their presence is the incentive for wild hurrahing from their forces. Business meetings are being held in the Chattanooga courthouse. Gen. J. S. Fullerton is grand marshal of the occasion. Park guardians, ex-confederates and ex-federals, assist the troops in maintaining order.

Visitors, as a rule, are doing Chickamauga as in '63, taking first the confederate lines near Thedford house, where Bragg had first planned to whip the enemy, but in which he was foiled by the night march of the federals, and following the fight till the nightfall of the 20th. The field is intensely interesting thus taken, and by aid of the markers, monuments and cannon, it is easily done. Ohio has fifty-nine monuments; Minnesota, five; Illinois, thirty-six; Massachusetts, one; Michigan, eleven; Missouri, three monuments and eighteen markers; Wisconsin, nine; Pennsylvania, nine; United States regulars, nine. The confederate monuments have not yet been placed. This, however, has not dampened southern ardor, for from every state in Dixie crowds have come.

MONUMENT TO REGULAR U. S. CAVALRY.

The annual reunion of the Army of the Cumberland was held last evening, 18th., with Gen. Charles H Manderson, the silver-tongued Nebraskan, as orator. The Army of the Tennessee was present and the scene was an inspiring one.

TONE OF TRADE.

The Business Situation as Viewed by the Agencies.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"A slight set-back which may mean much or nothing, according to the final outcome of the crops, is not unexpected at this season. If the government crop reports were correct, the situation would not be encouraging. But not much confidence is placed in the reduced estimate of corn, none at all in the estimate of wheat, and even the most enthusiastic bulls do not think it worth while to quote the government report as to cotton. The fact is that we are beginning to market not far from 2,200,000,000 bushels of corn, though only about 500,000,-000 bushels will be moved from the counties where it is grown: about 450,000,000 bushels of wheat, of which the farmers are unwisely holding back a large proportion: and about 7,200,000 bales of cotton, if the later indications are not erroneous, as they very easily may be, to add to the stocks carried over.

"The wheat crop is evidently larger than the department has estimated, though nobody knows how much larger, and is coming forward with more encouraging rapidity, no less than 5,773,173 bushels having been received at western ports, against 5,443,001 bushels for the same week last year, from a much larger crop. The price declined sharply, about 2 cents per bushel, with little indication of recovery. The price of corn has also yielded with a strong prospect of the largest crop ever grown, and at 38 cents at New York a large proportion of the crop will be of little profit to farmers.

"The failures during four weeks of August amounted to $8,121,503, of which $3,863,396 were of manufacturing and $4,103,804 of trading concerns; but for the first week of September the aggregate was $1,495,677, of which $635,643 were of manufacturing and $755,534 of trading concerns. Failures for the week were 187 in the United States, against 219 last year, and 34 in Canada, against 44 last year."

Bradstreet's says:

"The week is characterized in trade circles by an unexpected, but no less pronounced, improvement south and southwest. This is reflected at markets from which supplies are distributed to these regions. Relatively unfavorable features are found in a quieter tone in dry goods jobbing circles; a check to seasonable trade throughout the central west, due to the unusual heat; low prices for men's wear woolens, and an unsatisfactory outlook, due to depressed quotations abroad; only moderate orders for domestic woolen manufactures; cancellation of a few Nebraska general merchandise orders at Chicago, and the somewhat critical position of the American tin plate industry, owing to the heavy advance in price of tin plate bars, without a corresponding increase in the price of tin plate."

THE MORA CLAIM SETTLED.

United States State Department Receives a Draft for $1,459,000.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—After more than twenty years of controversy, which several times threatened to bring about strained relations between Spain and the United States, a draft for the amount of the indemnity demanded by this government for the confiscation of the Cuban estates of Antonio Maxima Mora, a naturalized American citizen, was delivered Saturday by Senor Depuy de Lome, the Spanish minister, to Mr. Adee, the acting secretary of state. All that remains for the final settlement of the claim will be the arrangement of the assignments made by Mr. Mora to creditors and the delivery to him of the residue.

There was no ceremony about the culminating act on the part of Spain. Senor de Lome appeared at the state department a few minutes after noon and was immediately shown into the office of Mr. Adee. He handed to the latter a draft, signed by himself, on the London financial agent of the Spanish government for £295,412, 16s, 11d, the equivalent of $1,449,000, or 1,500,000 Spanish pesos, and Mr. Adee delivered in return a formal receipt for the amount signed by himself as acting secretary of state.

[The payment of this claim ends a long international dispute between Spain and the United States. It arose from the occupation by Spanish troops many years ago of a Cuban plantation owned by the Moras, who were American citizens. The troops did enormous damage and the estate was held by the Spanish authorities for a long time. Spain long ago admitted the justice of the claim for damages, but always managed to avoid payment of it. Finally Secretary Olney took it in hand and enforced its payment. The greater part of the money was assigned long ago to various Americans, among them Nathaniel Paige, principal counsel for the claimants, and Charles F. Flint, chief proprietor of the New York Times, who is said to own one-half of the entire claim.]

GUNBOATS TO THE SCENE.

Penalties Imposed on Leaders in Chinese Riots Will Be Enforced.

FOO CHOW, Sept. 17.—In consequence of the attitude of obstruction assumed by the Chinese officials toward the progress of the inquiry into the recent outrages at Ku Cheng and their refusal to carry out the sentences imposed by the examining court upon the ringleaders in the attacks upon the Christian missions at that place, two gunboats have been ordered to ascend the river to demand the enforcement of the penalties imposed. A rebellion has begun in the province of Fo Kien and the local officials, instead of attempting to suppress the rising, have fled. A force of imperial troops are on their way to the scene to try to put down the insurrection.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Shanghai saying that the Chinese regard the inquiry into the massacre of Christians at Kucheng as a mockery, and have begun to release the prisoners without consulting the British consul.

A Fabrication.

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras, via Galveston, Sept. 17.—The statement that an earthquake had occurred on last Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, with a loss of 300 lives and causing destruction of a church and dwellings, is without foundation so far as is known in Tegucigalpa. No such earthquake has been heard of here and the statements made in the supposed dispatch are false in detail.

DEFENDER WINS.

America's Cup Will Stay on This Side of the Water.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—The regatta committee of the New York Yacht club reached a decision late Wednesday afternoon in the Defender protest matter, giving the race to the American boat. Lord Dunraven accepts the decision, although he holds that his boat was crowded by the Defender, and that the accident was unavoidable. He said: "I believe in the ability and honesty of the regatta committee of the New York Yacht club. I believe that no effort has been made to influence their decision. . . . While it is very certain that the America's cup is lost by reason of the Valkyrie's racing showing, it is by no means certain that at some time the cup may not be carried across the Atlantic."

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—The America's cup races ended in a fiasco. Lord Dunraven withdrew the Valkyrie immediately after the start and the Defender sailed over the course alone. The America's cup committee notified C. Oliver Iselin that three races and the cup were awarded the gallant Defender, and the crowds afloat and ashore cheered the ship that sustained Uncle Sam's supremacy on the seas, and the skipper and crew that sailed her. For at least another year the international trophy is ours, and in all probability it will be many years before a British yacht again challenges for the cup. The mishap of last Tuesday and the rather remarkable action of Lord Dunraven Thursday will not further the interests of international sport. Americans have complained of not being given fair play when racing in English waters, and both in 1893 and this year extra pains have been taken to prevent his lordship from having cause to complain of unfairness here. In withdrawing he does not charge any special unfairness to his boat, but bases his action upon the interference with both yachts caused by the large excursion fleet. The trouble was not caused Thursday, for the course was clear at the start when the British boat withdrew. The objections raised by the owner of the Valkyrie were made before the boats reached the line, and based upon the conduct of the attendant fleet on Saturday and Tuesday. Lord Dunraven sent the America's cup committee a strongly worded letter complaining about the action of steamboats and tugs, and stating that he was not willing to continue racing the Valkyrie unless a clear course was provided. He added that in his opinion the course should be distant from any large city.

Up to the time for the start for Thursday's race, Lord Dunraven had received no reply to his communication. After his withdrawal from the race, he said it was his intention to start if he received a reply, but none coming to hand he merely went down and crossed the line, to give the other boat a chance to make the race.

The Defender, with spinnaker and balloon drawing well, proceeded on the course alone, finishing in good racing style. The America's cup will remain on this side of the water this year.

Defender crossed the line at 11:30:24.
Made the first turn at 1:26:58.
Crossed the finish line at 4:04:46.
Time of the Defender over the course, 4:43:43: official.

THE GOLD RESERVE.

Heavy Withdrawals for Shipment Abroad Create an Uneasy Feeling.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—The chief topic of discussion in financial circles has been the surprisingly heavy gold engagements for shipment by Saturday's steamers. The actual engagements amounted to over $5,000,000. The sudden engagement of $2,500,000 in gold by Lazzard Freres & Co., who have been accounted leading members of the government bond syndicate, made a general impression that the syndicate which has stood between the treasury and the gold exporters had been disrupted. J. Pierpont Morgan, the head of the syndicate, specifically denied this. The syndicate says that all its obligations to the government were fulfilled in June last and that there is no agreement to maintain the reserve at the $100,000,000 mark until October, but that since last June they have voluntarily put gold into the treasury to maintain its reserve and would continue to do so even up to the 1st of January if necessary, and if existing conditions make it feasible. Experts explain the steady drain upon the treasury's gold by the backwardness of the cotton and corn crops. In a few weeks, it is predicted, there will be an abundance of commercial bills in the market and the pressure will be relieved.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—The treasury general balance is $181,962,000, of which $99,568,000 is in gold. The deficit so far this fiscal year is $14,-000,000, and with the revenues running at the present figures this deficit by January 1 next will approximate $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. The amount realized by the three bond issues made within the past two years exceeds by only $6,000,000 the total treasury balance, so without those issues there would now be an empty treasury. With a full treasury of course it follows that gold can always be had, but with a treasury depleted by expenditures exceeding the revenues, and with the tide of commercial exchange against us, gold is difficult to retain in the treasury.

WANT THEIR PAY FIRST.

Captors of Another Insurance Swindler Ready to Deliver Him.

TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 16.—John W. Hillmon, who held policies aggregating $25,000 in the New York Life Mutual, of New York, and Connecticut Mutual, and who was supposed to have been killed near Medicine Lodge, March 17, 1879, has been found finally. Charles M. Foulkes, general claim agent of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway, and C. W. Ryus, his assistant, claim that they have located him in either Arizona or New Mexico and that they are prepared to produce him and establish his identity whenever the companies will make a deposit of $10,000 to be paid after they have filled their part of the contract. The proposition was submitted some time ago, but it has not yet been either accepted or rejected.

Sons of Veterans.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 18.—The ninth national encampment of the Sons of Veterans of the United States assembled in Knoxville Monday, Commander in Chief William E. Burdy, of Cincinnati, presiding. Every state division with the exception of Colorado, California and Oregon is represented. Three thousand visitors are in attendance.

THE FOUR VOICES.

By sober Brown Beard, who is said to have seen
Of winters and summers some thirty-and-seven,
Tripped lightly Gold Tresses, of sweet seventeen,
The fairest creature on this side of Heaven.

"How pleasant the evening breezes that stir
The rustling leaves, as the woods grow dim!"
Such aimless words spake his lips to her:
But his heart was muttering low to him:

"Oh, that the summer of life were spring!
Oh, to have found her long summers ago!
Is it yet too late? Would this sweet young thing
Give the hope of her youth to—? No, ah, no!"

"Yes, pleasant it is, when the woods grow dim,
To hear the sound of the leaves that stir!"
Such trivial words said her lips to him:
But her heart was whispering low to her:

"Is there ever a man like the man that I see—
A man like the Bayard of ages ago?
He thinks me childish and foolish: ah, me!
Could he really care for—? No, ah, no!"

Quoth his lips: "Good night, you now are home."
Prayed his heart: "God love her, whose ever she be!"
Said her lips: "Good night, you were kind to come."
Sighed her heart: "No, he never, could never love me."

—Truth.

FROM COO ROCK.

BY MAY D. HATCH.

It was variously designated the "Turtleback," the "Turtledove," and sometimes merely the "Dove." The old salts of the island knew it only as the Turtleback rock, named for its decided resemblance to the shining brown shell of a monster tortoise protruding from the water; but on account of its charming security for a tete-a-tete and for the appreciation it met with from those who were strong enough swimmers to enjoy its advantages the name which had been given to it for its crustacean likeness was usually perverted into the simple, melodious appellation: "Coo rock." Indeed, so general had this term become that even the venerable guests of the Shawkemo house, discussing the tide which covered it pretty well at the full, would call it so in all seriousness, possibly confusing it, mentally spelled with a K, with the various Indian names with which the island abounded, or believing it had reference, spelled with a C, to the gentle lapping of the waves about it.

It was Monday morning. Most of the men who had come to spend Sunday on the island had returned to town, three hours distant by rail; and, although the day was exquisitely clear and beautiful and the bay rejoiced in a thousand shifting blues in the sunshine, the bathers were few—a half dozen boys at the school age turning back-somersaults off the float, some children paddling around in the wet sand with their clothes tucked up behind out of the wet like cock feathers, and a staid matron or two near shore, mildly bobbing up and down incased in flannel and bathers' hats.

As Marie Trask walked down the float for her morning plunge she nodded to the boys, looked out over the water, and sat down a moment on the edge to try its temperature. She felt a little lonely, a little depressed; she swung her feet—irreproachable in size, in shape, and in black silk stockings—lazily in the water, and meditated.

She was a comely object for the water to reflect; a trim, svelte, girlish figure in a well-fitting black bathing suit, her blonde skin browned by the outdoor life she was leading, her eyes clear gray, a small nose which had a tendency to be Roman, a sweet, happy mouth that was quick to smile and show the white teeth that had not yet lost their baby unevenness at the edges, and, crowning all, her sunny blonde hair; not so much of it, but it crinkled and rippled over her head in such a fashion that no one came near her but wanted to lay a hand on it and smooth it down a bit, just to feel how soft and silky it was.

She looked over toward the rock; it was quite a distance out in the little harbor, and the tide ran rapidly there at the turn. It was about full now, but it would be slack water for some time yet, and she thought she would try it. She had been out there often, but never alone. She was a strong swimmer for a girl, and destitute of fear; but always before to-day there had been someone to go with her.

She slipped off the float; the water was perfectly clear and just cooler than the air. With strong, quiet strokes she started for the rock as a goal; half-way out she grew a little tired, floated a few minutes to rest, and then swam on. It seemed much further than usual; but always before she had been diverted on the way with manly converse, or given a friendly hand if she were tired. At last she reached it, pulled herself eagerly up to the highest bulging point of the rock, and gave a sigh of satisfaction. She turned her back to the shore and looked out at the hill-clasped harbor.

What a perfect day it was! She was irritated with herself for being blue, but how could she help it when other people made idiots of themselves?

What a stupid thing for her not to have looked through the book, anyway, before she had lent it to him; but at least she had discovered in time what a jealous, doubting friend she had almost consented to marry. She remembered every word of the letter she had found waiting for her that morning. It ran:

"DEAR MARIE: When you loaned me Dobson's poems last night, I do not think you knew you had left the inclosed verses in the book. Perhaps I should not have read them [Certainly he should not, Marie thought], but I have done so. They say that a woman's instinct is quick to rush at the truth: a man has that instinct when he loves. By the signature, 'Jack,' I knew at once they were from Jack Edgerton, and that he must have written them to you when you left the Edgerton camp three weeks ago. Only three weeks! It unnerved me to think he had the right to say such things to you such a little while ago, and—yes, and you have let me believe you loved me.

"I am going to leave on the 8:10 this morning. I cannot bear to stop to say good-by.
Yours, DARRELL."

And the verses—"Dear Eyes," they were called:

"So many eyes meet mine each day—
Earnest and tender, and eyes that smile,
Or dark without hope, and all the while
I think of you who have gone away.

"I long so to look in your eyes, dear,
Your eyes that speak to my soul until
The cry of earth's loneliness grows still
As I draw you so near,—so near."

She had never known Jack could make a rhyme till these verses had come to her. Dear, honest Jack! how sorry he would be if he knew all the trouble he had brought about. No, she could scarcely hold him responsible for her present discomfort—it was all her own carelessness; and the next time she indulged in the exchange of literature she would shake the volume to its foundations to exorcise all lurking imps that might do her ill. One is so apt to tuck things away in a book and then forget all about them. Yet, after all, he might have given her a chance to explain.

She was aroused from her reverie by the soft rush of waters parted by the even stroke of strong arms. Marie turned her head shoreward; a man was rapidly swimming toward her. The head looked very familiar, but he had written her he was going on the eight ten. A few more strokes and there was no doubt of his identity; she turned her gaze again out to sea. He clambered up on the rock beside her. He was a superb creature, with limbs bronze and shining as one of Gerome's Arabs. He looked like some radiant river god with a dash of water on his chestnut hair, his eyes as blue as the morning sea, and with that beauty in his face that comes from conscious strength and kindliness and the glory of youth and vigorous, overflowing life.

"Good-morning, Marie."

She had not yet looked at him, but she met his gaze now with a half smile.

"I thought you were going on the eight ten."

"I started," he answered, "crossed the ferry, went to the station, and came back. Why did you come out here alone? You should have known better, the tide is running out now, and the swim back will be a hard pull all the way."

"I am quite capable of taking care of myself," she answered, somewhat stiffly, "and if you are afraid of the tide you would better go in at once."

He was astonished to find her adopting an injured tone; if anyone had a right to be hurt, he surely was the one to enjoy the privilege of that position. He looked at her despairingly; the little curls, dried by the sun and wind, beckoned maddingly. He forgot his grievance for a moment.

"When Venus came ashore on the waves," he said, keeping his eyes on the curls, "Zephyrus blew her there, and before he left her he hovered about and kissed her until her hair, which the sea had wet, was dry and shining like silk; but it always kept the crinkle the motion of the waves had given it, and all true daughters of Venus have inherited that ripple of the waves ever since. That is the story I always think of," he finished, seeking now her clear gray eyes, "when I see your hair in the sun, Marie."

She laughed gayly. "It seems to me some one else is dipping into poetry besides poor Jack."

His brow darkened. "Don't make a joke of it," he said; "the blood has been boiling in my veins ever since I read it. I don't blame Jack for loving you, nor for writing it to you. I ought not to have read it; but the thought of his having his arm about you, as it clearly implies, and that you have cared for him, perhaps care for him still, has driven me almost beside myself. If you have any pity for me tell me the truth, or let me go."

"You may go," she spoke coldly; "I will not keep you."

"See; we are here," he said, "under the free sky, with the pure clear water, all about us, close to honest nature, and life would be so good to me if—is there always to be an if?—if only I knew the truth and that it is not what I thought—that you do not care for him."

"I am very fond indeed of Jack; and as for the verses, I think they are charming, and that any girl should be happy to inspire a man like that."

Darrell groaned. "You are more frivolous than I believed, and you have not been true to either of us."

"I think I will swim in," she said. She slipped off the rock and struck out for the shore. He followed her silently, keeping his eyes upon her, for the tide was making hard out to sea.

"Don't try and buck against the tide," he called; "let it carry you down. Just swim for the shore; you waste your strength that way." He was swimming close beside her now.

"If I needed it," she asked, "would you be strong enough to tow me in?"

He laughed grimly. "Try me," he answered.

He took both her hands in his, swimming easily on his back; to this healthy young giant her added weight was nothing. They went rushing through the water at what seemed a terrific rate of speed to the girl whose endurance had already been taxed by the swimming, and the sense of security and strength it gave her was a delicious relief.

At last they reached the float; the little boys were tearing up and down the sand doing jumping "stents." She let go of his hands and he lifted her easily to the float. She was quite pale; perhaps there had been some nervous strain in her unusual exhaustion.

"Don't you feel well?" he asked, as he stood beside her, taking long, deep breaths after his exertion.

She put out a small, wet hand to him which he gladly took in his own damp grasp. "I should never have gotten in alone," she said, catching her breath a little, "so I cannot be horrid to you any more. That book belonged to my Cousin Mollie, but she does not want to announce her engagement to Jack till the fall."—Demorest's Magazine.

Mosquitoes.

Willie Yardstick and Charley Ribboncounter were proceeding from the station to the place where they had engaged summer board. Said Willie to the stage driver:

"Driver, ah you evah troubled by—er—mosquitoes in this wegion?"

The stage driver looked at him scornfully for a moment (it was in Jersey), and then answered:

"Not much, young man. We're too small game for 'em. They come up out of Jones' swamp and put their heads on one side and look at us like a turkey gobbler examining a grasshopper, but they seldom peck at us."

Willie and Charley smiled feebly.

"They're a nuisance, though," went on the driver—"standing 'round in the way, and tramping down fences and the like o' that. One night just after dark they picked the wheels off'n this here stage."

"Wha—what did you do?" asked Charley.

"Put them horses on a keen run, and come into town with that stage flying out behind like the linen duster of a man running to catch a passenger train."—Harper's Bazar.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Assessments.

State Auditor Dunn has completed the compilation into tabular form of an abstract of the assessment of personal property in Minnesota, as returned by the assessors and equalized by the county boards. The total value of all personal property, as equalized by the county boards, is $99,953,646, which is a decrease of $5,773,168 from 1894, which was $105,726,814, as established by the state board of equalization, to which the valuation this year has yet to be sent for equalization. The state board may either lower or increase the valuation returned by the county boards.

The returns show that the amount of property has greatly increased, but the valuations are lower than usual, especially on live stock. The total number of horses in the state has increased 20,000. The number of persons assessed, exclusive of firms, was 170,878. The total number of horses, mules and asses owned is given at 2,466,763, and the total number of cattle as 907,608. There are 306,643 sheep and 247,941 hogs assessed.

Hayward in Exile.

Harry Hayward is to go into exile at last and under suspicious circumstances.

Although he was supposed to have been enjoying solitary confinement such has not been the case. Drinkwater has been his companion in the third tier of cells in the large jail cage. The prisoners could talk with him and upon both days he mingled with the rest without restraint.

However, Drinkwater has been suddenly removed from the cell and sheets of steel will be placed all over the rear of Harry's cell. The sheriff states that this is for the purpose of preventing messengers and other things to ascend and descend to and from the condemned man's apartments to the prisoners confined below. The method of exchange so far has been a string elevator, which, it is understood, has run pretty frequently.

Seventy-Five Years Old.

September 10th marked the 75th anniversary of the existence of Fort Snelling, and the event was observed with fitting ceremony. The exercises which were held at the old fort consisted principally of a parade by the Third United States infantry now stationed at that post, and under command of Col. J. H. Page; a historical sketch of the old fort by Gen. E. C. Mason, U. S. A., and a concert by the military band. Among others who attended were members of the Colonial chapter, D. A. R., who were especially invited by the committee having the celebration in charge.

News in Brief.

Mrs. Emma Anderson, wife of a local land agent, living about two miles from Milaca, wandered away from home and has not been seen since. It is thought she was temporarily insane, as she had been heard to make threats of drowning herself.

Adelbert Hammer, a half-breed, was held to the grand jury at Redwood Falls, charged with assault in the second degree for seriously injuring Mrs. Welch by hitting her in the back with a stone.

George Hughes, a young man of Brookings, Green county, Wis., while threshing at Canby, got caught in the cylinder of the machine and crushed both feet so that amputation of one was necessary.

Lightning struck the dry kiln of the C. W. Nelson Lumber company at Cloquet and it was burned to the ground. The kiln was filled with shingles. The loss is fully covered by insurance.

John Brang, a farmer, who was recently arrested in his home in the town of Wilson and brought to Winona on the charge of threatening to kill his wife, and was released on the pleadings of his wife, went on another drunk after his release and repeated his wild actions towards his wife. His actions show that his mind is affected and he will probably be sent to the state asylum.

John Thomas, sometimes known as Geo. Galusha, a Slavonian living on the flats in Minneapolis, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.

Nicholas Stein, an old and respected citizen of Dakota county, was kicked in the stomach and killed.

Albert Anderson, of Eden Prairie, met with a heavy loss in the burning of his barn, containing grain, three horses and valuable tools. Some small children were playing with matches in the straw stack. By hard work of neighbors the house was saved.

The Duluth life saving station was recently put to the test for the first time, and saved eight lives. The first accident was the upsetting of a sailboat in the bay, containing six men, Tom Hogan, John Lynch, Wm. Welch, Phil Gillon, Frank Mullen and Frank Manning. All were saved. Later a double shell in the boat club's regatta upset, and the life crew happened to be close by and immediately rescued them.

Ed Mann, was killed in Minneapolis by the electric cars. Shortly before the accident a down town car on the Fourth avenue line had passed Mr. Mann, near Grant street, and he had caught hold of the trailer. His wheel was between the tracks, and as a car on the up trip passed him, he lost control of the wheel and collided with the passing car.

A terrible accident occurred on the street car track in front of the Brunswick hotel, Minneapolis, by which Tillie Mansfield, employed as a dining room girl at the hotel, will probably lose her life. At the time mentioned the girl was returning to the hotel. At the corner of Fourth street and Hennepin avenue she was struck by a Washington and Cedar car, knocked to the pavement and the whole right side of her face and forehead crushed in so that the brains oozed out. She was taken to the hospital, but no hopes of her life are entertained.

The Hoo Hoo's held ther annual session in Minneapolis.

H. Blodgett, a farmer near Wells, lost his house and contents by fire. The loss is heavy.

John Erickson, a stone mason, fell down a stone stairway in Minneapolis and was instantly killed.

The board of prison managers has granted a parole to Louis Nelson, sent up from St. Louis county.

Sigfried Sommers, of Rice Station, was cruelly beaten and robbed of $20 by two highwaymen on the bridge at Red Wing.

A flow of water has been secured in the artesian well at Winona at a depth of 163 feet.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Since 1850, in Armenia, 200,000 persons have become Catholics, and sixteen dioceses have been erected there.

—At Oxford this year 197 candidates presented themselves for honors in classics, the largest number on record; there were 97 candidates for honors in modern history.

—The Aquarians, an early Christian sect, took their name from the fact that they insisted that wine should not be used in the sacrament of the Lord's supper and substituted water for it.

—In Wales before the great revivals of the last century crime abounded. Since that time Presbyterian and Nonconformist counties of Wales are freer from crime than any other county in England.

—The late Edward A. Hunter, of Philadelphia, left about $500,000 to be used, after the death of his wife and daughter, for the free treatment of surgical cases in the hospital of the university of Pennsylvania.

—One of the smallest denominations in this country reported to the enumerators of the eleventh census is the Reformed Presbyterian (Covenanter. It has four societies, one church, three halls and thirty-seven members.

—Marseilles wishes to have a university of its own like Lyons and Bordeaux, and suggests that the faculty of letters at Aix, near by, be transferred to it, as at Aix there are but three students outside of those holding state scholarships.

—Sig. Ansaldi, a student, blind from birth, graduated recently with high honor from the Florence Istituto de Studi Superiori, the school for post graduate university work. His thesis on "Compensations in the Senses of the Blind" was declared by the examiners to be an important contribution of new material to physiological psychology.

—Dr. D. K. Pearsons, of Chicago, has given not less than $2,000,000 to western educational institutions. Beloit college has received $200,000, Knox $50,000, and the Chicago theological school $50,000. To Whitman college, of Walla Walla, Wash., and Berea college, Kentucky, $50,000 each was given upon condition that the friends of the school would raise an additional $150,000 within a specified time.

—Representatives of persons who have died in the odor of sanctity and of their actions and works may be placed on the walls or on stained glass in Catholic churches, by a recent decree of the congregation of Rites, provided there be no mark of worship or attribute of sanctity connected with them. Pictures only of persons beatified or canonized can be placed on the altars or represented with the aureole.

—Kena has recently had an experience not common among German universities. The four little Saxon duchies to which the university belongs — Weimar, Coburg, Meiningen and Altenburg—are unable to support it, and there was danger that it would be closed, when the old students and their friends sent in donations large enough to assure the continuance of the old university, which is one of the most pleasant in summer in Germany.

—A lady in St. Andrew, Jamaica, has been excommunicated by her vicar under extraordinary circumstances. She had lost a locket and chain at church, and after two years found the verger's daughter wearing them; she sent a lawyer to demand her property, and it was returned at once. The vicar thereupon insisted that she should apologize to the verger, and refused to admit her to communion until she did. She went to another church.

GENEVA'S GREAT FOUNTAIN.

It Stands at the Entrance of Its Port and Is Three Hundred Feet High.

The fountain that the municipality of Geneva, Switzerland, has recently established at the entrance of the port of that city is certainly the largest fountain that exists upon the surface of the globe, since it is no less than three hundred feet in height. It may be seen from a great distance, in clear weather, detaching itself like a great white sail flapping through the effect of the wind.

The city of Geneva possess a most complete distribution of water under pressure, the motive power for which is obtained from an artificial fall established upon the Rhone at the point of the lake. The water for domestic purposes and for the running of certain motors is raised to the height of two hundred and fifteen feet above the level of the lake. For the distribution of motive force it is raised to a height of four hundred and sixty feet. The reservoir is an open air one, and is situated upon the top of Bessingers, at a distance of three miles from the turbine building. A very ingenious regulator, invented by Mr. Turrettini, assures the uniformity of pressure in the piping.

The length of the first pipe line is about forty miles and that of the second about sixty. It is with this latter that the fountain conduit is connected. The latter is set in play only on Sundays. It is sometimes set in operation also on week days, in the evening. Instead of a single jet of great height, several are then utilized that do not rise so high. Powerful electric light projectors, placed in a structure near by, brightly illuminate them with their rays of varied colors, which transform them into a luminous fountain of the most beautiful aspect.—Boston Herald.

Elephant Poachers.

According to the news received in London, the government of Ceylon has recently put in operation some stringent laws against poaching by elephant hunters. Henceforth anyone caught sneaking off with an elephant will be vigorously dealt with unless provided with a government permit. One can understand a poacher getting away with a pheasant or with a few rabbits, which at a pinch can be concealed under a coat; but the wildest flight of imagination refuses to picture a game-thief in the act of surreptitiously bagging a bull elephant.—Demorest's Magazine.

Not to Blame.

Nodd—I don't believe my son will ever earn his own living.

Todd—That's not his fault.

Nodd—Why isn't it?

Todd—Didn't you say he was a graduate of a business college?—Puck.

Saved.

"Oh," she said, "your conduct is enough to make an angel weep!"

"I don't see you shedding any tears," he retorted, and his tact saved the day.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Tomato Ketchup: Peel and stew two quarts of tomatoes, add one tablespoonful each of salt, black pepper, mustard and allspice. Strain through a wire sieve, add one pint of vinegar, and simmer slowly half an hour. Seal up in bottles.—Boston Budget.

—Grease Marks on Wall Paper—Grease marks on wall paper may be removed by dabbing a paste of fuller's earth, or pipe-clay and water, on to the paper, and when dry brushing off. If one application does not remove the stains, try another.—Housekeeper.

—Blackberry Mush—Put one pint of blackberries into one pint of water and bring to a boiling point. Moisten two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with a little cold water; add to the blackberries and cook about five minutes; add half cup of sugar and turn out to cool.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Plum Butter: Cook the plums until tender enough to run through a colander or coarse sieve. After the seeds and skins have been removed in this way measure the pulp, and to each quart add one pint of stewed apples and one quart of sugar. Boil until thick, stirring often to prevent scorching.—Farm and Home.

—Pickled Smelts: Wash and clean the smelts. Pound together half an ounce of pepper, half an ounce of mace, half an ounce of saltpeter and the same quantity of nutmeg; lay the smelts in layers, placing the seasoning between each layer; add a few bay leaves; boil some red wine, and pour over the fish enough to cover it. When cold cover well.—Harper's Bazar.

—English Fruit Tart: Make without an under crust. Fill a shallow dish with one and one-half pints of seeded cherries; sprinkle with one cup of sugar and one tablespoonful of flour. Make a rich pie-crust and roll out a little larger than the top of the dish, but of the same shape. Prick it with a fork and spread over the top of the cherries, turning in at the edges. Bake about an hour in a moderately hot oven. The English sprinkle sugar over the tart before it is brought to the table.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

—A Rich Chilly Cream: A refreshing dessert for a hot day is Bavarian cream with chocolate, and its manufacture is quite simple. Boil together a pint of cream or rich milk and two tablespoonfuls of sugar; when nearly cool, flavor with vanilla, and add half a box of gelatine, which has been dissolved in a cup of water; also add the yolk of four eggs well beaten and two sticks of chocolate which have been dissolved in a little hot water. When it has become quite cold, stir in a pint of cream, which has been whipped to a stiff froth. Put in a mold and set on the ice until wanted.—Detroit Free Press.

—Railway Cake: Six ounces of flour, two ounces of lard, four ounces of sugar, two eggs, half a teaspoonful of baking powder, a little milk, two tablespoonfuls of jam, and a pinch of salt. Place the flour, salt, sugar and lard in a bowl, break the lard into small pieces, rub smoothly with the tips of the fingers and add the baking powder. Stir it in with a knife, beat the eggs till very light, add to them a little milk and add them to the dry ingredients. Beat the mixture well, turn it into a greased tin and bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes. When cold cut through, spread jam over one-half, sift sugar over and place the other half on top.—Leeds Mercury.

FEMININE FASHIONS.

Notes of Interest to Women Who Follow the Styles.

So vigorous has been the protest in almost all directions against running the shoulder-seams down on to the arms, that designers have at last compromised by making a special sleeve-top shirred close to the arm and putting on the fullness below this and above the elbows. This section forms an epaulet-shaped top to the sleeve and is outlined by a band of passementerie or other garniture. This meets with approval, because it furnishes a reasonable pretext for another strip of trimming on the sleeve, which has heretofore been quite plain, simply because there seemed to be no other way to manage it.

A novelty costume is made of coffee-brown silk. The skirt is flaring, and on either side where the side and front breadths meet there is a deep under box-plait. This is made of the same material, and is faced with a darker shade of the goods. There is a bodice of black satin with an extravagantly-elaborate trimming of iridescent passementerie. This bodice extends slightly over the hips in a point back and front and comes up just above the bust. Straps of the trimming cross over the shoulders, and similar bands are placed below the epaulet-shaped section, as described, which forms the tops of the sleeves. Below this are very large puffs, and from the elbows down the sleeves are plain. Long lapels of passementerie fall from the edge of the bodice over the side seams of the skirt. There is a black satin collar with a bit of passementerie that makes an appropriate completion to an extremely stylish dress.

The apron idea in skirts is increasing. An imported dress of lustrous silk has the front breadth slightly draped, after the fashion of a score of years ago. Down one side and across the front is a very elaborate garniture in embroidery and applique of velvet. The very low corsage has the sides covered with applique ending in a point at the waist-line. Across the top of the corsage is a ruching made of plaited chiffon and velvet roses. Above this the neck is filled in with chiffon. The sleeves are of chiffon, and are drawn up at the front nearly to the shoulders, slightly exposing the arms. At the tops, where the draping ends, are very large clusters of roses and foliage.

A new waist is of taffeta, in changeable rose and light green. The waist is shirred in at the belt and slightly full at the top. There is a very wide turned-over collar of brocade, a belt and large loops of the same, and extremely long and wide sash ends falling down either side of the front on the skirt.

A handsome costume for a young lady is made of very close accordion-plaited nun's veiling in a light shade of tan. The skirt is perfectly plain; the waist has three wide box-plaits—one down the middle of the front, the others from the shoulder seams to the belt. An embroidered yoke extends under these plaits. The puffed sleeves have deep cuffs of embroidery; a sash of wide ribbon, with loops and very long ends, is worn with this dress.—N. Y. Ledger.

KNEW ENOUGH TO RIDE HOME.

Characteristics of a Wise Dog That Trained for a Fight.

The other day passengers on a trolley car from one of the smaller suburbs were highly amused at a passenger who got on in front of a handsome residence. The car stopped and in walked a large red Irish setter dog. He walked bravely up to the front of the car and sat down in front of the door. He wagged his tail in a condescending manner when any one would attempt to make friends with him, but would take no further notice of the overtures. He sat very erect and looked straight ahead till the car almost reached a certain street, when he arose and walked back to the platform and, looking up into the conductor's face, gave two short barks, which said as plainly as a dog could talk, "Please stop." When the car had quite stopped he frisked off and ran into a store on the corner. "He never tries to jump off before the car has stopped since he had a tumble. He was so ashamed of himself that morning I don't think he got on a car for a week after that," remarked the conductor. "He is a smart animal. I tell you that dog knows as much as most folks. Funny thing happened some time ago. When he was a pup his master was in the habit of walking over to town, and always made a short cut down the railroad for a few squares, and of course always took the pup along. Well, the switchman at one of the crossings owned a large belligerent canine of no particular breed, who had an idea that any part of the railroad belonged to him and no trespassers were allowed. One morning Don was coming along at his master's heels as peaceably as could be when the tough dog ordered him to git. He 'got,' too, but his gait didn't suit the other dog, and he put out after Don and gave him a good whipping as a gentle reminder that he was not to pass that way again. After that Don could not be persuaded to go within three squares of the railroad. He would follow his master till he saw that he was going toward the railroad, and then he would tuck his tail carefully between his legs and make for home. No amount of force or persuasion could get him any nearer to his enemy's stamping ground.

"His master had quite given up the attempt and Don had grown to be a very large dog and had a very peaceable disposition, as most dogs of his kind do have.

"One morning Don was waiting at the gate and joined his master as he started for town. When they came to the railroad his master was looking for Don to turn tail and run, but Don began to bristle up his back and walk with a little spring, like a Bowery tough. Suddenly he saw the railroad dog, and without any preliminaries he went for him, and if he didn't whip that dog! Golly! but the hair did fly. When he had done the job up to his satisfaction he came back to his master, wagging his tail, and looking as proud as Lucifer. After that he went down the railroad as often as he wanted to, but never offered to touch the other dog, and the other dog was usually inspecting something of great interest on the farthest corner.

"Don's master says he has no doubt but that Don had been eating beef and oatmeal and getting himself in training for that scrap for months. He's a daisy, I tell you. I'd give a lot for a dog like that."—Chicago Tribune.

THE REAL MILLIONAIRES.

Two Society Women at a Summer Resort Discuss Their Projects.

"Ah, Mrs. Ray, delighted to see you. How are you spending the summer?"

"Oh, delightfully, thanks. We rented our lakeside avenue mansion, you know, to our 'Buttons,' who is spending his honeymoon there."

"Ah really? And you will take some extended toors?"

"Oh, no; we have so many obligations this summer that we couldn't possibly think of wandering far. You see, our cook has saved so much in our five years' service that she was able to buy a position in the swell 'four hundred' of New York, and we are just back from spending a month with her at her Newport cottage."

"Really? And now where?"

"Well, for July we were the guests of our butler, who has a magnificent mansion at Saratoga. For August we intend to accept our chambermaid's hospitality over in Paris."

"Your chambermaid in Paris!"

"Oh, yes. You see, she saved enough while in our service so that a French count married her for her money—"

"How wonderful! And then?"

"Well, September will be divided up between our coachman, who has a villa at Narragansett, and our head groom, who has a country house at Richfield. I tell you, it's a great privilege to know the swells and be on good terms with the leaders of fashion and form."

"Yes. And what a delight it must be to you to know that you have made so many millionaires in your lifetime, although you yourselves can never hope to be rich. It somehow compensates after all for the everlasting problem of the servant question."—N. Y. World.

WOMEN'S FACES—like flowers, fade and wither with time; the bloom of the rose is only known to the healthy woman's cheeks. The nervous strain caused by the ailments and pains peculiar to the sex, and the labor and worry of rearing a family, can often be traced by the lines in the woman's face. Dull eyes, the sallow or wrinkled face and those "feelings of weakness" have their rise in the derangements and irregularities peculiar to women. The functional derangements, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses of women, can be cured with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For the young girl just entering womanhood, for the mother and those about to become mothers, and later in "the change of life," the "Prescription" is just what they need; it aids nature in preparing the system for these events. It's a medicine prescribed for thirty years, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y.

—Although saloons appeared to be closed last Sunday we saw a couple of men from out of town that had been drinking to much.

—Prof. C. A. Wharton of the County Seat has been engaged as the local editor of the Eagle. Mr. W. is not a tyro at the business and will, doubtless furnish the readers of that paper with some good reading.

—The Village Council, we understand tendered the position of Mayor made vacant by the resignation of W. F. Kohler, to J. E. Borsh and to Geo. P. Schaffer, respectively. But neither gentleman would accept the position.

—The Street Commissioner on Tuesday dug the dirt away from the hydrant on the cornor of R. R. Ave. and River St. and found that a small piece of twine had fallen onto the valve in such a manner as to cause a leak. The valve was fixed and now the "spring" in that place is dry.

—Mrs. Williams President, and Mrs. M. S. Ladue, Secretary, of the Presbyterian Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will hold a meeting in the M. E. Church next Sunday evening at 6:30 and at 8: o'clock Mrs. Van Cleve will address a meeting in the City Hall on some topic of general interest. All are cordially invited. Come and hear something that will do you good.

—On Monday night a suprise party was given to Mr. J. C. Buckley and family who countemplate removing from our midst in the near future. A number of people gathered at the residence and presented him with a beautiful silver set as a reminder of their esteem. Rev. Tabor Davies made the presenting speech; and Mr. Buckley replied, but those present say his speech was brief.

—Some people who have lost a finger or a foot, or other part of their anatomy seem to give up in dispair and do not try to work or to gain a livelihood; but go about begging for an existance at the hands of the charlatably inclined. Such might get a lesson from Kilpatrick the bicyclist who performs wonderful feats on the wheel notwithstanding the loss of a leg near the hip, and is more active than many who have all their limbs.

—On Sunday evening a regular fusilade was kept up on the west side for quite awhile, we are told that the women were frightened and one went and invited the parties doing the shoot- to leave. A spirited team coming into town were badly scared as the guns were discharged close behind them; much to the discomfiture of the occupants of the cariage. There is a law to the effect that people shall keep Sunday; There is an ordinance that no one shall discharge fire arms within the village limits. But, with impunity these things are disregarded. There seems to be an understanding between the officers of the law and village authorites that arrests are to be made only on complaint of some one. A man under this rule may steal or even murder and so long as no complaint is made, go free. This is wholly wrong. The constables, marshals, policemen, and others, called peace officers, are supposed by the law to see that no breaches of the peace occur, and not wait until some one lodges complaint. Of corse if the peace officers would perform their whole duty, times would be lively for a short season: and some individuals in high places, might have lodgings in the cooler for a season: but civilization would not go backwards in our midst on that account. Let the peace officers read up the law, and preserve the peace.

—And the cat came back.

—Freight hauling between this place and Watertown is good now-a-days.

—200 Sample Hats, Men's and Boy's just received at Borsch's they all go at, and less than, wholesale cost.

—The M. E. ladies sociable held at the City Hall last evening had a goodly number of visitors and patrons for supper.

—Since the wasps got into the School rooms and made as much fun as Mary's little lamb the board has ordered window screens.

—Earnest Otto and F. Q. Lindsley leave on Tuesday morning for Fergus Falls; to act as jurors in the United States court, which will be held there.

—Yesterday a G. N. Carpenter crew tore down the repair shop to remove it to some other place. Tim Gleeson will make his head quarters in Minneapolis for awhile.

—An effort is being made to have some posts and rails put up opposite the cemeteries south of town. This should be attended to before cold weather comes on.

—County Surveyor Moland seems to have a steady job surveying for S. S. Breed who is having his land inside the town limits laid off into lots so that he can sell them.

—Rev. Frank R. Millspaugh, who used occasionally to hold Episcopal services here, was ordained Bishop of Kansas, yesterday, Bishop Whipple preached the sermon on that occasion.

—Much more sorghum than usual has been raised in this neighborhood this season and is being manufactured into fine syrup. It makes one of the best and cheapest additions to the table of those who raise it.

—The posts and gass pipes for hitching stock on fairdays on River Streets have, at last been put in place. We understand. O. L. Billings kindly helped the committee find the second-hand gass pipe in Minneapolis:

—Thomas Kloske is arranging with Jos Nitzel to go into the tailoring business with him here. John Brandser is expected to-morrow to open up a shop up stairs in the Swedeback brick block. Both are well known, having lived here before.

—Occasionally a hose is attached to a hydrant and a small portion of the street sprinkled. This cools the air, lays the dust, and otherwise makes thiugs look more cheerful. Why could not some man be engaged to sprinkle all the business portion of town as often as needed, during these hot, dry, dusty days.

—Delano watering troughs are quite an accomodation to those having teams to water. But if it was not necessary to get out and make a bow to bull-headed stupidity everytime a team is to be watered, by being obliged to uncheck the horses before they can drink, it would be much more plesant for the teamster.

—The new Editor of the Eagle called on us and suggested that it would be well to be on friendly terms. We were willing. But it seems the power behind the New Editor did't feel that way and the usual number of slurs and insinuations forninst us, appear in the Eagle. This makes us think the new head to the Bicephalus Avis has considerable "bray."

—Now that the council have made a bargain to furnish water to Jim Hill for five years; and have hired the electrican for two years, we see no obstacle in the way of making all necessary contracts for five years. Hire a street commissioner for five years. License the saloons for five years, and do away with the uselessness of having a village council wrangling around town calling each other vile names and otherwise disgracing what should be honorable positions. We do not think that a council should make bargains beyond the limit of its own term of office.

—What's become of the committee appointed to secure the location of the Fourth Hospital for Insane, at Delano. The Commission appointed by the Government, is to start in at Chaska on the 6th. of Oct; and we will probably be visited soon after. Some steps should be taken toward showing up our location to the best advantage possible. A committee should be appointed who will go over the grounds and thoroughly acquaint themselves with all the advantages we have to offer and be prepared to promptly answer all questions the commission may ask. Get a move on you, gentleman.

—It seems that Tim Gleeson had been engaged to repair the town pump and had every thing in readiness to do so when the new council, or one of them, concluded not to have it fixed up. Mr. Gleeson is going away and yesterday turned over to the street commissioner the castings with full instructions how to fix it in working order. Now that the river supply is short and daily growing more so, and as winter is coming and when the present "fountains" can't be used, and as it would require little outlay, the council should have the town well cleaned, the pump put in place, and not act foolish about the matter any longer.

—Quite a number of Delanoites have raised their houses to the grade established years ago by Mr. Cooley, of Minneapolis, or erected new buildings on foundations built in accordance therewith, and claim there has been no call for a change in grade, and demand that the proper plat, grading the village in a manner to discommode people the least; to preserve the beauties of the village, and at the same time furnish thorough drainage for all, be used. If our village authorities have been so dishonest as to destroy, or so negligent as to loose so valuable a thing as a plat of the grades of the village it is about time more care was taken in selecting village officers.

—Carrie the four year old girl of John Larson, fell and broke her collar bone last Monday. She is recovering from the injury nicely.

—Prof. Whorton calls Delano the metropolis, notwithstanding the Buffalo Journal claim that the County Seat is 17 bigger. Prehaps the Professor feels that the change of location recently made by him will make about that difference in the census.

—Services will be held at the M. E. Church, Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Rev. J. W. Powell, who has been our pastor for the last two years, will preach his farewell sermon; closing not only the year here, but ending his career of half a century as a Methodist minister. By special invitation he will preach a semi-centennial sermon to each of the Minnesota Conferences soon to be held. He will then take a superannuated relation with the conference, and move to Mankato.

County Cullings.

The office of Clerk of Court is to become vacant Jan. 1, 1896. From all that shows on the surface, the present incumbent. Mr. O'Leary, will continut to hold the office.

Two cars on the Soo road were throw off the track, near Annandale, Monday, and the passangers considerably shaken up, a son of Washburn had his finger broken. A weak bridge was the cause of the accident it seems.

County Surveyer Moland has stirred up quite a commotion among politicians by suggesting a new division of the county into Commissioner Districts. The one suggested makes the 3d. district from Delano to Dayton, quite a long district.

The new editor of the Eagle has come to a poor part of the country to tell people that "Br'r Eaton" don't know enough to tell a good editorial when he sees it. Why Mr. Eaton once live here, and taught school, and everybody knows that whatever else may be his faults this is not one of them.

From the Waverly Tribune we learn that Dr. J. V. O'Connor, now located at Watkin's had a bridle stolen. That it was found and when the thief came back to where he had hidden it he was captured and tried and fined with costs $33. A pretty expensive bridle. But it is dangerous to steal from doctors.

The County Fair has been over-stimulated in the direction of racing—five or six hundred dollars having been appropriated for that purpose. It is largely dependent upon all of us to do everything that we can toward redeeming it from this feature; and we hope the people in this portion of Wright County will exert every energy toward gathering material for exhibitions. If you have nothing to exhibit encourage your neighbor who has.

There seams to be a unanimity of opinion among the Wright County editors concerning the Anual Fairs held by the Wright County Agricultural Assaciation; they agree that it is not for the interests of the Association or of the County to allow racing and other gambling games to take precident of every thing else. While it is all right to give a fair premium for a fast trotter or a fleet runner, raised in the county, there is no particular benefit derived from inviting the fast horses of the country at the expence of the products of the fields and the shops, and of other interests. As the editors of the county know so well how to make a good interesting, lively, paying fair we suggest that they each become a member of the Agricultural Association, so that they may vote and take part in making the fairs the models they desire. Rush up gentlemen and deposit your dollars and help along a good cause. No one thing the county could do, perhaps, to advance the interests of all the citizens would excell the Anual County Fair if properly carried on.

WHAT IS THE REAL GOOD.

BY JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

"What is the real good?"
I asked in musing mood.
ORDER, said the law court;
KNOWLEDGE, said the school;
TRUTH, said the wise man;
PLEASURE, said the fool;
LOVE, said the maiden;
BEAUTY, said the page;
FREEDOM, said the dreamer;
HOME, said the sage;
FAME, said the soldier;
EQUITY, the seer.

Spake my heart full sadly—
"The answer is not here."

Then within my bosom,
Softly this I heard—
"Each heart holds the secret—KINDNESS is the word."

Volume 7 Closed.

THIS number rounds out volume Seven of the BUFFALO GAZETTE. In October 1888, at Buffalo, under the direction of Dr. Geo. C. Barton, the first number of volume 1 was issued. After about a year and two months; or at No. 9, of vol. II, the present editor and proprietor purchased the outfit and moved it to its present quarters, from whence it has been regularly issued, and as generally read, perhaps, as any paper in this county. It has tried always, to give people what it considered their duties; to meet out praises to the deserving; and to criticise laxness, and to rebuke the actual offender against law and order. Our motto has been "Equal rights to all, and special previleges to none." We propose to fight it out on this line, and can be found first door East of the Post Office, on Rail Road Avenue, Delano, Wright County, Minnesota. Call all, whenever you are in town.

THE Representative in an editoral appeal "Important, To Our Subscribers." threatens to suspend publication until times are better unless its delinquents come to time and pay for their reading matter. The Sage concludes that if his time had been devoted to writing books, and delivering lectures instead of editing a Populists paper he would have been thousands of dollars better off. How does Mr. Donnelly think people could have procured the money to pay him for writing books and delivering lectures any better than they can for editing a paper? Or do not readers appreciate the Representative as well as they do "Caesars Column" or the "Golden Bottle?"

THREE women, Mrs. Kate Zimmer, Mrs. Stephen Dietrech and Mrs. Luther Frimrood were arrested in Stearns County last week on complaint of John Welna, teacher of distric no. 93. He charges them with having applied to his body a coat of molases and feathers. The St. Cloud Times says the women all pleaded not guilty and a list of twenty four names of jurymen was prepared. We don't know what could have provoked this summary proceedings on the part of the women, but think they would have saved credit and done better to complain to a legal officer if they had a grievance. Lynch law should cease to exist, and probably would were it not so hard in many cases, to have justice given the deserving ones.

Those Editorials.

Last week we criticized the new editor of the Eagle for pitching into us, and this week the Eagle replies as follows:

Thank you, Dr., thank you. Compliments from you are always acceptable, but wholesale praises lack as much in Journalistic politeness as they do in good taste. But allow me to suggest that in the future, you be sure you compliment the AUTHOR of the articles. The above mentioned editorials were in the galleys before we took charge.

We have become so used to "wholesale" criticisms of the Old Bird, from the fact of her dual nature, that we could hardly do the subject justice otherwise. But if the editor is not to be the AUTHOR of everything in the Eagle, and will kindly put "E" after his editorials, and have the publisher put "P" after his publications, perhaps we can aim around him next time.

County Commissioner Districts.

It would seem that the nearer the commissioner districts can be made to having the same number of inhabitants the better. But business relations, and the wants and needs of different sections of the country should be taken into consideration as well in re-districting. Perhaps instead of putting each whole township into a certain district it would be better if some sections of one town be placed in two, or if need be more districts, in order to follow out the plan of having the populations equal, and the business relations congenial in each district, so far as possible. But under the existing system of balloting it would be difficult to divide the townships; so there must be more or less trouble about satisfying all. It seems as if the matter of re-districting should receive the careful attention of the commissioners before any changes are made. It might result in a much more unequal and unfair representation of voters than under the present planof districts.

Census Returns.

The new census reports have been made public. Minnesota has 1,537,350 inhabitants. A gain of 271,524.

Wright County with its increase of 3,486, has come in ahead of Washington County, and now, instead of being twelfth on the list in point of numbers is eleventh; although there is no city or village containing 1000 people within her borders. Counties having more inhabitant than Wright beginning with the largest are: Hennepin, Ramsey, St. Louis, Stearns, Otter Tail, Polk, Winona, Blue Earth, Goodhue, and Fillmore.

In the Sixth Congressional District we are third; St. Louis having 77,487, and Stearns 41,612. Wright having 27,653.

The number of counties in the state is now 81; Roseau being a new one.

Silver Question.

The editor of the Toledo Blade in reviewing Geo. A. Whites article on Free Coinage, we think grew a little to enthusiastic; and let out a few points that don't seem calculated to help explain why gold should be the only money. He says: "Does Mr. White happen to know that no later than just before the last issue of bonds, certain Hebrew financial men had planned to make a raid on the Treasury by presenting enough Treasury notes to take out all the gold, and thus force the country on the silver Standard?"

Is it not a very humiliating admission to make concerning this great Government, "of the people for the people and by the people?" The very idea that a few men, and Hebrews at that, had it in their power to force this country into silver money alone, is astonishing!

The Blade futher says: "Whether he knows it or not it is a fact.,

"What prevented it? The very people whom he ignorantly abuses as the enemies of the people; the bankers of New York, who, getting wind of the matter, banded together, and served notice on the foreign Shylocks that they would furnish gold to protect the Treasury, if the raid were attempted. The latter gave it up of course." And what better is this view of the case? The bankers of New York, banded together, had the power to say this great and free goyernment of 65,000,000 should not be forced into the use of silver alone as the standard on which to do busisness.

And all this while the Blade man says in the same article: "If the choice were presented between gold monometalism, and silver monometalism, the great majority would follow the former, because it would disturb no values, as we are on the gold basis now."

If this state of affairs can exist while "We are on the gold basis now" it looks as if the best thing to do, would be to change the basis! No body of any consequence in this part of the country, wants a syndicate of Hebrews nor a band of New York bankers to dictate the financial policy of this country, and if, as the Blade says they are, able to do so now, under the "gold basis" system, it is about time to reconstruct affairs, to get onto the bimetallic plan that has served the country so long.

The reviewer of Mr. Whites article after using up what arguments he could; and denounced the balance as silly, and as lies, undertakes to knock him entirely out of the discussion by saying "One does not go to a man working in a shoe shop for a valuable opinion on the number of bushels of corn in this year's crop, nor to a farmer for an opinion on the export trade in sewing machines but to men whose business requires them to obtain correct information.

If the Blade wishes to present its readers with all sides of the financial question it ought not to give its writers such a send off as that.

We think on the financial question the editor of the Blade could get pointers on finance from almost any farmer or shoe maker in this part of the country. They all know the money in their pockets is not as plenty as in former years. They argue from experience; they know that though they toil as early and as late, and their crops are as large that for some reason prices are down, and that money is very hard to get hold of. They are not theorists, but have from practical experince learned these facts. And if now as the Blade editor says we are liable to have the United States government change its dollar from gold to silver or back again as Hebrews see fit and we are on a gold basis, and there is not enough gold so that it will reach round to do business on, these shoemakers and farmers, will act on their own judgement along about election day.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20, 1895

When a man gives information to an enemy in time of war he is regarded as a public enemy and upon proof of his guilt he is executed and buried in a traitors disgraced grave. But if there is no way to punish those who prove themselves to be still worse enemies of the country by trying to precipitate a financial panic through misrepresentation of the condition of the nation's finances and of the intentions of the administration. A private individual can, through appeal to the courts, have the man who seeks to injure his credit and commercial standing by making untrue and partially true but misrepresenting statements punished, but members of the administration have no way of reaching the man who, solely for a partisan purpose, are daily writing and circulating attacks upon the credit of the U. S. in the shape of willful misstatements concerning the Treasury and the intentions of Secretary Carlisle. Men who bring on a financial panic do a thousand times more harm than those who betray an army on the eve of battle, and there ought to be some way of punishing them as traitors to their country. If that is not feasible, Congress should at least so legislate that the government, through the heads of the executive departments, should have the same right to have a newspaper writer or editor arrested for criminal libel as the citizen now has. With such a law upon our statute books the present partisan misrepresentations of President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle in republican newspapers would not be possible, and the probabilities of financial panics would be decidedly lessened.

About as near half of the administration as could be got at attended the dedication of the battlefield of Chickamaugua as a national park. Vice-President Stevenson and Secretaries Lamont, Herbert, Smith and Attorney General Harmon going, and Secretaries Olney, Carlisle, Morton and Post master General Wilson remaining in Washington Secretary Carlisle expected to have gone, but circumstances, aided by unpatriotic misrepresentations, made it advisable that he should remain at his post.

A gentleman who has been in Florida on business said: "Senator Call who in advocating the early recognition of the Cuban revolutionists by this government speaks for a very large majority of the people of Florida. This sympathy for the Cubans is worthy to be classed high, too, whenit is remember-that Florida is yearly becoming a greater rival of Cuba in the production of tobacco used in the manufacture of fine cigars."

Secretary Lamont's action in advancing out of his own pocket the money to make up the shortage in paying the June salaries of the officers and men of the army is unprecedented but highly creditable. Had he not done so they would have had to wait for Congress to rectify the error that made the shortage before they could get their salaries.

Senator Vest indignatly denies the authenticity of the recently published interview which made him announce a change of front on the silver question, and says he is still for free coinage at 16 to one, as he has always been.

Hon. J. W. Judd, U. S. District Attorney for Utah, is visiting Washington. He says: "There is much in the situation in Utah to make the democrats hopeful of electing their State ticket and two U. S. Senators. I believe that it is not putting it one whit too strong to say that our chances of success are fully equal to those of the opposition. Utah has enjoyed two successive seasons of good crops, and the condition of business is satisfactory. The people are feeling very good over the return of better times, and that will insure to the benefit of the democracy. If we carry the Territory this year it is almost a sure thing that it will go the same way in 96."

The general impression seems to be that the lawyers of Mora displayed a monumental cheek when they filed a protest against the action of Secretary Olney in accepting a settlement of the Mora claim without compelling Spain to pay the interest from the date of the claim. Secretary Olney will take no notice of the protest. He did not act in this matter as the attorney or collector for Mora, but as the representative of the United States government. So far as this government is concerned the settlement was final.

"Is your son coming back to the farm when he completes his college course?" asked the minister.

"I donno" said the old man. "I donno. The money he has to spend for books an' board ain't going to leave no farm for him to come back to, I'm a feerd, sometimes."—Indianapolis Journal.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

It was my intentiont to attend the national G. A. R encampment at Louisville, K. Y. this year, as that is my national state but never lived there only a few short months, my father moving to Ind. when I was 5 months old. Kentucky has quite a history for it was in early days called the dark and bloody ground. It was once the home of Daniel Boon, Simon Kenton, and last but not least, Abraham Lincoln. At Louisville is where I cut Mason and Dixon line when on my way South to join in the great conflict, the war of the rebellion. But after I had consulted the elevator man as to the price of wheat, the grocery man as to the price of potatoes cabbage and that chickens was only 6 cts. per pound on foot, my patriotism wilted like a cabbage leaf, and I said this is two much of a sacrifice, just to gratify the lust of the eye for a few days, but it is said that it was a grand encampment and that Louisville done nobly in entertaining the boys in blue.

We are in need of some of Baron Rothchilds gold to help us out of this dilemma, (money bonds) but theirs is not a free will offering, it comes only through usury. It is said there are eleven of those Baron Rothschilds, and thev stand ready to fleece and filch the world of its monev wherever they have an opportunity.

On last Saturday morning at an early hour I was reminded that the spell of dry weather was broke by the patter of rain upon the house top it seemed like good old time once more to have a refreshing shower but that was only a starter, afterwards it came in profusion, now we have plenty of watered stock on the market.

With plenty of soap and soft water it would be a good time for the politician and office seeker to clean up.

Some of my republican friends think that a good democrat could not be found these times with a locomotive head light in the middle of the day but this is only imagination of the brain for democrats are having a strong and healthy growth and when Grover Cleveland and a few more such fellows down at Washington becomes full converts to the republican party then the democrat party will spring into life and activity like a mushroom on a July morning. I am heartily sick of hearing the leading newspapers and chief politicians of the country trying to make fools of the people. They remind me of Caiaphas the high priest, a truckler to Rome for there is good in no other save in my party. Some of us are joined to our idols, and we will not let thee go.

The watermelon season is now over: on comes fried chicken and pumpkin pie.

Grace is short when we three meet
For without thee a feast of welcome is not complete.

James McIntyre will serve on the jury, in Minneapolis, next week.

The late rains have made the roads quite muddy in places. Perhaps the bicycle man will get a rest for a few days. This bicycle craze is no help to the farming community; and in imagination, but little if any help to anybody. It is a good deal like the little boy playing with his rocking horse.

But, Mr. Editor, the man of news has just shut up his shop and gone out to look for his wheel, and I must cut off this communication.

J. H. McGARY.

A Hard-Headed Farmer.

"Miss Minnie Bertha Learned will now give us some very interesting experements in chemistry, showing the carboniferous character of many ordinary substances, after which she will entertain us with a short treatise on astronomy, and an illustration of the geological formation of certain substances, and close with a brief essay entitled, 'Philosophy vs. Rationalism.'" Thus spoke the president of a young ladies' seminary on the class-show day.

A hard-headed, old fashioned farmer happened to be among the exanining board, and he electriffed the faculty, and paralized Miss Minnie by asking:

"Kin Miss Minnie tell me how much sixteen and three-fourths pounds of beef would come to at fifteen and a half cents a pound?"

"Why, really, I—I"——, gasped Miss Minnie.

"Kin you tell me who is the Vice-president of the United States?"

"Why—I--I—Mr. B——, isn't he? Or is it—"

"Kin you tell me where the Mississippi River rises and sets?"

"I—I—don't just know."

A Fault Growing into a Menace.

Louisville Courier-Journal.

One of the imperfections of the newspaper press, which does more than most others to impair its influence, is the tendency of so many news gathers to exaggerate or fabricate, which is invited by the very nature of the work, and which is encouraged by the system of collecting out-of-town news that prevails in metropolitan newspaper offices. Their correspondents, stationed all through the territory they wish to cover, are paid at space rates, and consequently are tempted to expand trivialties into sensations, and where even trivialties are lacking to "invent" news outright. It is this way a class of newspaper adventures and camp followers has been created, despised by reputable newspaper men as "fakirs," who are even ready to sell lies where ever we can find a market. Of course, no properly-conducted joural retains one of these scamps after it has once detected him in a "fake," but that does not prevent him from sending his wares to other journals, changing his name or securing a confederate again "working" the very paper which has discharged him.

A SEAWEED of the South Pacific often grows to be 30 or 40 inches in diameter, and 1,500 to 2,000 feet in length. It has no root, in the proper sense, the nourishment being absorbed from the water.

SINCE the beginning of this century no fewer than fifty-two volcanic islands have risen out of the sea. Nineteen of them have disappeared, being submerged; the others remain, and ten are now inhabited.

CAPT. S. L. RINDE, who read a paper before the British association the other day on cannibals, says that all the races of the Congo basin in Africa practice cannibalism, and that while it is prevented in some portions by the white civilization, in other parts of the basin it is on the increase.

A CHICAGO paper says that the Fort Sheridan soldier who killed an escaping convict carried a "Krag-Jorgenson rifle, the bullets of which always speed with fearful velocity toward the mark." One would be led to suspect from this that the bullets of other rifles stop to get a glass of soda on the way.

ONCE a careless man went to the cellar and stuck the candle in what he thought was a keg of black sand. He sat near it drinking wine until the candle burned low. Nearer it got to the black sand—nearer and nearer, until the blaze reached the black sand; and, as it was nothing but black sand, nothing happened.

PIERRE LORILLARD, the great tobacco man, is tired of America and is credited with desires and designs to follow the example of William Waldorf Astor and end his days in England. Wealth seeks to lean on aristocracy, and aristocracy, especially that of the impecunious kind, seeks to lean on wealth of the American kind.

THE prize fish story of the season comes from Allentown, Pa., where, it is said, a bolt of lightning struck a fish pond and killed between seventy-five and 100 trout, all of which were from 18 to 22 inches in length and weighed two to four pounds each. Lightning will, sometimes, strike into water; but those were very large trout

THE Massachusetts state census shows that nearly all the towns have lost in population, while the cities have gained. This is a significant movement. Boston gained 26 per cent. and a fraction in the last ten years. The largest gain was made by New Bedford, 65 per cent. These gains are nearly all in manufacturing cities. The tate as a whole gained 28 per cent.

THE American inventor has a habit of rising promptly to every occasion. When the call came for fenders for electric cars he set his mind to the task, and already more than one thousand devices of that sort have been produced. Unfortunately, few if any of the fenders come up to the popular desire. Each works well under certain conditions, yet none proves trustworthy under all circumstances. But the right thing will be discovered after a time, for Yankee inventive genius never gives up.

THE Hawaiian government has become so satisfied of its strength that it has pardoned all the persons who took part in the late abortive insurrection, with the exception of a few of the ringleaders, who will have to serve out their terms of imprisonment. Among those who profit by this gracious act on the part of the Hawaiian authorities is Queen Lil, who has been kept in her house under close guard for some months, because at the time of the breaking out of the insurrection arms and ammunition and compromising documents were found on her premises.

THE record-breaking trip of a New York Central train from New York city to Buffalo, 436½ miles in 414½ minutes, or something over 63 miles an hour, is not much of a gain over the rate of speed maintained by the English train that ran August 23 from London to Aberdeen, a distance of 540 miles, in 512 minutes. But it is enough to regain the championship which that speed wrested from us, and that is no small matter in the eyes of England. How old Stephenson would have stared if he could have stood beside the track and seen this flying train go whizzing past.

THE union of three of the Central American republics—Salvador, Nicaragua and Honduras—under the name of "the Greater Republic of Central America," and the possibility that Guatemala and Costa Rica will join the union, does not necessarily mean that peace and prosperity will hereafter prevail for those nations. Signed compacts have but little weight with the people of Central America, and the old game of revolution and insurrection is likely to be played again. The first adventurer who seeks the overthrow of the established government is likely to find plenty of followers.

SCENE OF REJOICING.

Chickamauga's Bloody Battlefield Now a National Park.

Gen. Gordon's Eloquence Rises to the Occasion—Senator Bates' Words of Peace—Meeting of Survivors.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 21.—The speech of Gen. John B. Gordon on Thursday was one of the notable features of the three days' celebration. We give a resume below:

Gen. Gordon, of Georgia, opened his address by quoting the illustrious Charles Sumner's proposal in the United States senate to strike from the battle flags of the union all mementoes of the civil war. He eulogized the broad and catholic spirit of patriotism which inspired that proposition, though he said Mr. Sumner reasoned as a classical student rather than a practical statesman. Mr. Sumner, he said, was not the only statesman who then believed that the preservation of war memories was the perpetuation of war passions. He was not the only one who failed to appreciate the mighty changes which were to be wrought in time: or the hallowing effects of great trials and sorrows upon the tempers of a people: or the elevating, ennobling and unifying power of our Christian civilization and free institutions. All christendom was amazed that the end of the struggle found the men of both armies and the people of both sections favorable for the decrees of battle and all for the cherished constitution of their fathers.

MONUMENT DEDICATED TO SECOND MINNESOTA REGIMENT.

Then Gen. Gordon asked: "Is this fraternity to last? Is this unity to endure? If 'yes,' then liberty shall live. If 'no,' then the republic is doomed, for in the womb of our country's future are mighty problems, imbued with life and power and danger, to solve which will call into requisition all the statesmanship, all the manhood and loyalty to law of all the sections. The patriotic American who loves his country and its freedom and who fails to discern these coming dangers and the urgency for united effort to meet them is not a statesman, and the statesman, if I may so characterize him, who realizing these dangers, and would still, for personal or party ends, alienate the sections or classes, is but half a patriot. Perish, then, forever, perish from American minds and hearts all distrust, all class and party and sectional bigotry and alienation: but live, long live, forever live, as the last hope of the republic, mutual trust, confidence, brotherhood and unity between their children, who are the heirs of the immortal honors. Forever live the spirits which animated the American congress and government in making possible this inspiring hour, and may the spirit of this hour abide in the hearts of our descendants through all generations."

Gen. Gordon closed an impassioned and eloquent peroration as follows:

"Every uniform worn by the brave, whether its color was blue or gray, every sheet of flame from the ranks and rifles of both; every cannon that shook Chickamauga's hills or thundered around the heights of Gettysburg, every whizzing shell that tore through the wilderness at Chancellorsville or Shiloh; every bullet-rent flag that floated in victory, or went down in defeat on any field; every patriotic song or prayer wafted heavenward from the north or the south; every loving and tender ministration at the dying soldier's side; every agonizing throb in woman's heart or burning tear on devoted woman's cheek—all were contributions to the upbuilding of a loftier American manhood for the future defense of American freedom. And now, by the authority of the American congress and the executive department of the government: in the presence of these survivors of the great struggle: in the midst of this historic woodland, whose leaves were reddened with heroic blood and whose giant oaks still bear upon their shivered trunks the visible track of shot and shell: by these flowing fountains, whose crystal waters symbolize the purity of purpose which convenes us in the presence of all these witnesses, and in the name of this great republic and its people, we set apart, as the American Mecca, and consecrate for all time, this immortal battle ground, made forever glorious by American valor."

Closing Exercises.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 23.—Chattanooga put on its best holiday attire Friday. The scene of the celebration was transferred from Chickamauga's battlefield to the city. The morning was devoted to the parade through Chattanooga's streets, and proved to be the most brilliant and attractive event up to that time.

The procession formed on Market street, the principal business thoroughfare of the city, and was characteristic of the occasion. First came a platoon of police and then the United States troops, foot and artillery, in camp at Chickamauga park, under command of Col. Poland. These numbered, all told, about 1,209 men. There were battalions from the Sixth, Fourteenth and Twenty-third infantry and Battery F Fourth artillery.

The rear of the column was under command of Capt. F. H. Phillips. The visiting governors and their staffs, together with the various state park commission's carriages, followed Gen. Fullerton and staff.

Gen. J. S. Fullerton, president of the park commission, was grand marshal. On the reviewing stand were Lieut. Gen. Schofield and Vice President Stevenson, the reviewing officers and a large body of the distinguished visitors and prominent citizens. The procession disbanded shortly after passing the reviewing stand and the battery proceeded to Orchard Knob, on the summit of which was fired the union salute of forty-four guns at noon. At that hour began the exercise in the tent intended to commemorate, in connection with the dedication, the battle of Chattanooga proper.

Vice President Stevenson presided. The proceedings were opened with prayer by Rev. Samuel J. Nicolls, D. D., of St. Louis. Hon. George W. Ochs, Chattanooga's eloquent executive, was introduced to welcome the visitors to the mountain city.

Senator Bate's Speech.

Gen. W. B. Bate, a senator from Tennessee, was the first speaker. His address presented the southern view of the causes leading to the war. He expressed his pleasure that the lapse of more than thirty years had mitigated the passions, allayed the excitement and disposed the minds of all surviving contestants of these great battles to look back at the past with those moderated convictions which are due to a contest in which each party held principles and convictions to justify the contention.

The senator gave a detailed history of the battle of Chickamauga and the events preceding and following it, as viewed from his standpoint. He deprecated any renewal of the struggle, saying:

"The blood and carnage of 1861-5 should not be repeated. No thoughtful man, however, is free from grave apprehensions when he sees the ugly signs outcrop here and there and hang ominously over the destinies of our country. We even now see the faint yet vivid flashes and hear the thunder in the distance, and pray that the storm may pass harmless.

"We, who did the fighting in our interstate struggle, know what war means, and should help avert the danger.

"But should danger come, I believe the conservative south may yet prove to be the rod that will conduct the fiery bolt harmlessly to the earth, and when liberty takes her flight—if she ever should, from this country—her last resting place will be in our constitution-loving, constitution-defending south."

He closed as follows:

"We, of the south, love our comrades with no less devotion; we see in them no less courage, honor, manliness and patriotism than you recognize in us fellow-soldiers. To the men of the south, their cause was not less holy, nor less sacred, not less rightful than you esteem that for which your armies fought."

Gen. Bate was followed by Gen. Charles H. Grosvenor, a representative in congress from Ohio.

At the meeting in the tent in the afternoon the visiting governors were called upon for remarks, and Govs. Morton, of New York; and Matthews, of Indiana, and Woodbury, of Vermont, responded.

Closing Scene.

Friday night's meeting of the survivors of the Army of Virginia and that portion of the Army of the Potomac that fought at Chattanooga brought to a close the programme arranged by the national commission in connection with the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga military park. The meeting was held in the tent and was presided over by Gen. E. C. Walthall, senator-elect from Mississippi, who fought against Hooker in the clouds on Lookout mountain. Addresses were made by Col. Lewis R. Stegman, of New York; Gov. Oates, of Alabama, and Gen. J. A. Williamson, of Iowa.

THE CUBAN CAUSE.

Revolutionists of the Spanish Colony Seem to Prosper.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—News of a battle, in which the Spanish were defeated by the Cubans and lost 300 men, was received Monday by President Palma. It came in a letter written September 14 by Pedro Rovira, a Spanish private who deserted to the Cuban ranks at Pera Lego when Campos was defeated. The Cubans had no cavalry, but made effective use of dynamite bombs, which, the letter says, struck terror to the enemy.

TAMPA, Fla., Sept. 25.—Letters received Monday by prominent Cuban leaders here state that on September 10 a constitutional convention was held at Najasa at which Bartolome Masso was elected president of the Cuban republic, marquis of Santa Lucia minister of the interior, Tomas Estrada Palma, representative of the government in the exterior and Maximo Gomez general-in-chief.

CHICAGO, Sept. 25.—The Tribune's Havana correspondent wrote under date of the 19th inst. that armed revolutionists were within 75 miles of Havana in the province of Matanzas. He further stated that he had it on the best of authority that there would shortly be an uprising in the west end of the island. With armed forces on both sides of Havana it would require not 80,000, but 500,000 Spanish troops to save the city.

Crew and Vessel Sink.

ESCANABA, Mich., Sept. 25.—The schooner E. R. Williams sunk in a gale Sunday night and all on board are supposed to be lost, as it would be impossible for them to reach shore in such a furious sea. ### TRADE REVIEW.

Dun Outlines the Situation During the Past Week.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"Movements of exchange and of gold have somewhat affected all markets this week. Exchange has fallen, though not because commercial bills have greatly increased and exports of specie, though diminished, will reach about $2,400,000. It is confidently believed that the international syndicate will allow no financial disorder and many are certain that an issue of bonds will come, but the root of difficulty is not removable by bankers, namely, that merchandise exports disappoints the government and the syndicate, failing to meet the cost of merchandise imported, and leaving a heavy balance to be paid abroad. August imports exceeded exports by $85,282,729, and net exports of gold were $15,159,782. A small cotton crop, with large stocks held abroad, a slender demand for Atlantic wheat, with Russian arriving in London in large quantities, and merchandise exports and imports at New York 30 per cent larger than last year in September thus far, scarcely promise speedy change. The volume of domestic trade, measured by exchanges, 29 per cent greater than last year, but 9.8 per cent. less than in 1892, is not quite as near the record of full prosperity for September as for August or July.

"In spite of gold exports wheat advanced for some days, in all nearly two cents. Corn rose and fell in sympathy with wheat, with as little reason. Western wheat receipts for three weeks of September have been 16,791,060 bushels, against 16,491,629 bushels last year, while Atlantic exports, flour included, have been 3,941,654 bushels, against 7,621,986 bushels last year.

"The surprising increase in production and advance in prices of iron seem to be bringing a natural check, as prices have gone so high as to cause some purchases from Europe, both of pig and finished products, and have also caused a distinct shrinkage in home demand.

"The cotton mills which laid in stocks of cotton below six cents are enriched by the advance in material, and enabled to make frequent advances in goods, which are sustained. The present demand is dull, but there are no reports of stoppage, and the threatened strike at Fall River does not come. The woolen manufacture is doing well in dress goods and hosiery, but the demand for men's woolens is much restricted, and a few mills have closed.

"Commercial failures for two weeks of the month were 474 this year, against 362, 764 last year and 328 for the same weeks in 1893. This year $1,725,814 were of manufacturing concerns, against $639,716 last year and $2,311,588 of trading concerns, against $1,796,048 last year. The failures this week have been 213 in the United States, against 210 last year, and 32 in Canada, against 48 last year."

SNOW IN THE WEST.

A Cold Wave Follows Closely Upon the Heels of the Hot Spell.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—Ten deaths from heat directly were recorded for the week ending Saturday night and many serious prostrations. The total number of deaths for the week was 517, a great increase over the same week last year. The record of horses killed by heat was broken, the number being 250. The maximum temperature for week was 91. The majority of deaths were of infants, thirty-one in one day being the highest.

SALT LAKE CITY, U. T., Sept. 24.—Heavy rain was followed by snow which fell steadily up to noon Saturday. A strong north wind prevailed and everything has the appearance of midwinter.

LEAD, S. D., Sept. 24.—Six inches of snow has fallen at Bell Mountain and 3 inches here. There have been no frosts, and the trees in full leaf are breaking beneath the load of snow.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—The hottest September week which the people of Chicago have experienced in over twenty years was followed Sunday night by a sudden cold. The temperature all day was as high as on any day during the phenomenal not spell, the thermometer at 8 o'clock p. m. registering at the United States bureau 91 degrees. At 11 o'clock p. m. the mercury in the Auditorium tower showed 66 degrees, a drop of 25 in three hours.

ALL FOUND ALIVE.

Members of the Peary Arctic Expedition Reach St. Johns.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Sept. 23.—The Peary relief steamer has arrived here with Lieut. Peary and his companions from Greenland on board. When the Kite reached Whale sound August 3 Lieut. Peary, Hugh J. Lee and their colored servant, Matt Henson, were found waiting for it. The party had only ten days previously returned from its great overland expedition, which had proved a comparative failure.

Lieut. Peary and the other two started late in March and made their way to Independence bay, which is the most northerly point of Greenland which he had reached on his previous expedition. Independence bay was reached early in June, but there were not enough men in the party to accomplish any bold venture. They were further deterred from any great undertaking by the insufficiency of their food supply, an obstacle which was foreseen last year. All three of those who participated in the journey were greatly reduced from the lack of food, and were obliged to abandon the attempt to make further progress. In this respect this year's work was only a repetition of last year's failure, although the weather experienced was much more favorable this year than last.

FOUR MEN SHOT DEAD.

Terrible Result of a Fight Over a Game of Poker in Kentucky.

MCKINNEY, Ky., Sept. 23.—News of a most terrific battle was reported Friday from Adams & Trowbridge's distillery, in Pulaski county, 15 miles south of this place. Lee McKinney says five men, one of them named Cain, of Mintonville, engaged in a game of poker in a little 12-by-12 room at the distillery. A dispute over the game arose and the shooting began. Cain alone escaped, and is credited with slaying all the rest. Most of the slain were either shot through the head or heart. Cain, it is reported, is evading arrest, though the officers are hot on his trail. The four dead men lie side by side in the mealroom of the distillery, awaiting identification and the order of friends.

Fumigated the Mails.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—Capt. H. M. Brooks, superintendent of the foreign mail service, Monday received a telegram from Postmaster McCoppin, at San Francisco, stating that the mails per steamer Gaelic, from cholera-infected ports, had been thoroughly fumigated in bulk bags, then opened and the contents fumigated a second time. Every precaution is being taken against the disease by the postal authorities, the fumigating being done in accordance with a standing order of the department.

CONSIDERATION.

If he were dead, the friend that now
You treat so harshly and unkind,
Would you not put aside the grudge
And say you had been weak and blind;
That you were wrong as well as he,
And smooth it over when too late
To bring to him the peace he craved,
The simple boon you thought too great?

If he were dead, you would relent
And pardon all his erring ways;
You'd say he meant to do the right,
And almost dare to give him praise;
He, who while living felt the sting
Of bitter words, unjustly said;
You'd show a contrite spirit then
And mourn your weakness—were he dead.

If he were dead, beyond your help,
You would forbear to even think
The thoughts that now you boldly speak
To sever friendship's sacred link;
If it were o'er—the task of life
You helped to make so hard and drear,
You'd feel at last a keen regret
And shed perchance a silent tear.

O, friends, treat not less kindly now
The near and living than the dead.
When hearts are cold they will not need
The words for which they sorely bled.
Be patient with the erring one;
Chide not his fault—help him instead—
Wait not to love him and forgive
'Till all is o'er and he is dead.
—Anna W. Simmons, in Young Men's Era.

FROM JEST TO EARNEST.

"I don't understand you at all," said Pierce Trevor to his friend Ralph Dewey.

"You talk as if I were a conundrum."

"So you are! Now, look here, Dewey, let's have a clear comprehension of the matter. Do you love Fanny White?"

"Well—yes—I rather think, on the whole, that I am a little taken with the sparkling brunette."

"'A little taken!' How very enthusiastic you are! And she, poor child,' is more than 'a little taken' with you."

"I flatter myself that you are right."

"Well, then, why don't you ask her to marry you?"

"There it is," groaned Dewey; "you are all in such a hurry. Can't a man admire a girl without being brought to book for it the very next day? I won't be hurried. When I get ready I'll ask Fanny to marry me. Are you satisfied?"

"Very far from it."

"As Miss White is only your wife's cousin, I really don't recognize your right to catechise me!"

"Does that mean that I am to mind my own business?"

Ralph laughed. "Construe it as you please—only pray don't bother me any more."

He threw himself lazily on the grass, flinging his cigar into the very heart of a cluster of wild flowers and making an impromptu pillow of his arms, crossed underneath his head.

"Sleep, then," said Trevor, a little contemptuously. "I can't afford to lose the brightest hours of a golden day like this."

Our hero had not lain there many minutes, however, before the soft chime of girl voices sounded through the tiny bugles of summer insects and the monotonous murmur of green boughs overhead.

"Girls!" muttered Dewey; "can't a fellow be clear of 'em anywhere? But they're on the other side of the copse, that's one blessing, and if I keep quiet they'll never beat up my ambush!"

They were on the other side of the copse—three bright-faced girls in fluttering raiment.

"It's so delightfully cool here," said Hildegarde Aymer, a fair blonde, as Saxon as her name.

"And one can talk here, too," said Mary Bell. "At the hotel one is never certain of not being overheard."

Dewey gave a silent chuckle at this.

Fanny White, leaning against the twisted stem of the veteran wild grapevine, devoted her whole attention to her parasol handle.

She was the prettiest of the three, with deep liquid brown eyes and hair black as the blackest jet, while her skin, just touched with the creamy tint that characterizes the creole, glowed carmine on her cheek.

"Fanny, do let me try!" said Hildegarde. "It will be such a splendid joke, and your English adorer is so long in making up his mind."

"But—but what will Capt. Aymer think?"

"He'll be delighted; men always glory in a bit of mischief, and Kent is such a splendid actor."

"Do, Fanny!" urged Mary Bell. "It will be just for all the world like the theater. Hildegarde's brother is to pretend to be desperately in love with you and you are to encourage his attentions until that slow-moving Dewey is brought to the point. How I shall enjoy the progress of the situation."

"But your brother must fully understand the scheme," said Fanny, hesitatingly.

"Of course; sha'n't I explain it to him myself? There's not a bit of harm in it, and Mr. Dewey certainly needs some stimulus. Now, do consent! Kate will be here this very evening."

"She don't forbid it, Hildegarde," eagerly cried Miss Bell, "and all the world knows that silence gives consent. Come, see how long the shadows are getting?"

And the three graces fluttered down the hillside.

Dewey rose to his feet and walked away also.

"My dear little girls," said he, by way of soliloquy, "it's a very cleverly concocted little plan, but it won't work, and I've no doubt I shall enjoy it as much as Miss Bell proposes to do."

And he laughed aloud to think how completely he should outgeneral his feminine adversaries.

"I'll keep Fan in suspense for another month, just to pay her for that!" he added, within himself. "I like the girl well enough, but for all that I won't be hurried into matrimony."

Knowing what he knew, therefore, Mr. Dewey was not at all surprised that evening when he walked into the hotel drawing-room to see a stylish young man in the uniform of a captain sitting on the sofa and being very devoted to Miss White.

"Let 'em work," said Mr. Dewey, and he sat down to play backgammon with a pretty little widow. Fannie watched him from beneath her eyelashes.

"It doesn't produce any effect at all upon him—the brute!" said Hildegarde, who had expected to see the recreant lover brought to capitulating terms at once.

"That's because we don't put it on strong enough," said the captain. "Fanny—I may call you Fanny, mayn't I?"

"Oh, certainly," said the little brunette; "it's all in the play."

"Well, then, Fanny, I think we ought to promenade through the halls arm in arm a little while, and if we were to whisper instead of speaking aloud—"

Fanny laughed and consented, and the whole evening long she and the captain exchanged very commonplace remarks in very confidential whispers, while Mr. Dewey and the widow played backgammon serenely.

"I like this," said Capt. Kent to his sister, when Miss White had gone to her room. "She's the prettiest girl I ever saw."

"Oh, but Kent, you mustn't fall in love with her."

"I shall not fall in love with her—there's no danger," said Aymer, "but it's such fun! I'm so much obliged to you for suggesting it."

Fanny cried herself to sleep that night. Dewey didn't seem to care a pin whether she flirted with Capt. Aymer or not.

The next day she went out horseback riding with the captain. Kent sat on his horse like a centaur and Fanny came back rosy as a whole bed of carnations.

"Are you going with us to the Cedar Falls to-morrow, Fanny?" asked Mr. Dewey that evening. "We said something about going together a week or so ago, didn't we?"

Fanny was ready with her lesson.

"Did we? I had forgotten; besides, I promised to go with Capt. Aymer."

"With Capt. Aymer? Oh, well, all right, I'll take Julia Symington."

Fanny's lips quivered, but Hildegarde shook her head at her, and she did not call back the young Englishman, as had been her impulse.

Capt. Aymer proved a most devoted cavalier and Fanny half reproached herself that she had enjoyed the day so much.

"It's very wrong of me, sighed Fanny to Hildegarde, her faithful confidante.

"No, it isn't; it's exactly right," responded Hildegarde.

"I—I begin to be afraid he don't care for me."

"He's a brute," asserted her friend; "and it will serve him right if you never look at him again.

So the glowing midsummer swept by and Mr. Dewey held aloof, hugging himself to think how he was outwitting the conspirators, though an occasional twinge of jealousy now and then passed through his mind.

Presently there was a sore outcry among the allied forces. An order had come from the inexorable war department and the captain must go somewhere on the frontier straightway.

"The matter was beginning to get a little serious," he thought, "and just as soon as that confounded puppy gets away I'll make little Fanny a happy woman. Maybe, though, it would be well to punish her for a few days longer."

"Oh, Fanny, Fanny, aren't you sorry?" sobbed Hildegarde, clinging around her tall brother, whose face was unwontedly grave.

"Yes, Hildegarde," said Fanny, "I am very sorry."

Capt. Aymer looked penetratingly into her face. There were real tears quivering and sparkling on her eyelashes and the roses had all paled from her cheeks.

"Fanny!" he said, impetuously, "is it from your heart?"

Fanny—silly little creature that she was—began to cry, and Hildegarde rushed forward.

"Oh, Kent! You promised that—"

"A man isn't responsible for his fate, and I have fallen in love with her," exclaimed the young officer. "Fanny, am I to love you in vain?"

Fanny tried to laugh hysterically.

"Of—of course; all this is only a part of the programme," she faltered.

"By Jove, but it's not!" cried Aymer. "What was jest has become earnest. I love you, Fanny: I cannot leave you here to become the bride of that self-conceited puppy. Tell me that I may hope!"

Hildegarde seized both her friend's hands.

"She loves you, Kent—she loves you. I can see it in her eyes!" she cried exultantly.

"Stand aside, Hildegarde," said Aymer. "I have the first right here. She is mine now." And he took her tenderly to his breast.

Yes—it was true that the little morsel of acting had become strong, lifelong reality. Kent and Fanny had played at "lovers" until love, the shy rogue, crept into both their hearts with almost unperceived footsteps.

"Are you happy, Fanny?" demanded the exigent army officer when all was settled and Hildegarde had gone to tell Mary Bell as a "great secret" how the little stratagem had ended.

"Oh, Kent," whispered Fanny, "I never knew what true happiness was before."

And Capt. Aymer must have been unreasonable indeed not to be satisfied with the answer.

He departed, carrying in his keeping the loving little heart of Fanny White.

Ralph Dewey contemplated the departure of Hildegarde's brother with no small degree of satisfaction.

"Now's my chance," he thought. "I guess, on the whole, I'll not keep her in suspense any longer, poor child. I only wanted to let 'em see that I wasn't to be coerced."

Mr. Dewey proposed accordingly in due form that very day.

"I am very sorry, Mr. Dewey," said Fanny, looking provokingly lovely, "but—but I'm engaged."

"Engaged?"

"Yes—to Capt. Aymer."

"Now, Fanny," said Ralph, argumentatively, "where's the use of carrying on this pretense any longer? Of course I know it's all a stratagem."

"But it isn't a stratagem," said Fanny, indignantly; "I love him and he loves me—and there's my ring."

She held up a pretty finger as she spoke, whereon glittered a solitaire diamond.

So Mr. Dewey found himself outmaneuvered after all, and accordingly retreated in as good order as possible, while Pierce Trevor, Miss Bell, Hildegarde and all the rest returned a unanimous verdict of "Just exactly what he deserved."—N. Y. News.

Killed and Wounded in Battle.

Twenty-five years ago the great battles of the Franco-German war were fought. That war of only 180 days cost Germany, in dead and maimed, 6,055 officers and 110,701 men. It appears almost incredible now that within a few months 21,508 French officers and 702,048 French soldiers were made prisoners or compelled to disarm.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Hung Himself.

Willie Riser, 12 years of age, son of A. K. Riser, living near Long Lake was found hanging by his neck, dead, in an outhouse, near his home. When found his body was partially on the floor, the rope not being long enough to entirely suspend the body. It is probably a case of suicide, the cause of which is at this time unknown.

Killed.

Martin Anderson, a young Norwegian, was shot and instantly killed at Stephen, by the discharge of a rifle. He was leading an unruly steer to the slaughter house. The animal became fractious and upset the wagon. The rifle lay in the bottom of the wagon box, pointing forward. After putting the box back onto the trucks, he raised the front end to pull it further ahead, when the rifle slid back and was discharged, the ball passing through the end board, entering his head just below the ear. The young man was 22 years of age, and has a brother and sister living in Minneapolis.

Molasses and Feathers.

John Weln, the school teacher in district No. 92, town of Holding, Stearns county, accompanied by trustees and others in his district, appeared before the county attorney at St. Cloud, and told how three women, Mrs. Katie Zinner, Mrs. Stephen Dietrich and Mrs. Luther Frimrood, had attacked him in school.

The three woman took Welna, who is a small man, prisoner in the schoolhouse. While Mrs. Zinner held him, the others poured molasses over his head and clothes, and then shook a bag of feathers over him. The performance frightened the children, who ran home, and much excitement was created. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the three women.

There has been much trouble in the district heretofore, and it is split up in factions. Welna, who is a Polander, is not acceptable to the Germans and Americans.

Coal Bids.

It will be recalled that some time ago the state fuel commission, composed of Gov. Clough, Treasurer Koerner and Auditor Dunn, rejected the bids for furnishing the the state institutions with coal. New bids were asked, and when they were opened it was found that the Northwestern Fuel Company of St. Paul, was the lowest bidder. It's figures on Wilmington, Ill., coal were very low. It is said that it cannot be furnished at the figure named except at a loss. The company also bid on Youghiogheny coal at a price which would afford a profit. The contract was awarded to the company for Wilmington coal. It is now said that the engineers of some of the state institutions have notified the fuel commission that they cannot use the Wilmington coal. The commission held a meeting and notified these engineers that if they could not use this coal the commission would endeavor to find engineers who could use it. The contractors were also notified not to furnish anything but Wilmington coal except on their written order. The commission exacted a bond for $50,000 from the contractors, and proposes to hold them strictly to their contract.

To Close the Grand.

The Grand Opera House, which for 14 years has been the leading place of amusement in Minneapolis, is to be closed and the building remodeled into a large apartment store. The bookings and general good will, as well as the theatrical property of the Grand and also the Lyceum, is to be purchased by a new company. The business is to be transferred to the Metropolitan Opera House, which, like the other property, is to be acquired by a new company now in the course of completing its legal existence, to be known as the Syndicate Opera House Company.

News in Brief.

Pauline Gayler, alias Helen Baylor, 17 years of age, was arrested at Mankato as she was stepping off a train from St. Paul, on the charge of grand larceny in the second degree.

A large new barn belonging to Wm. Finney, a farmer, four miles north of Wood Lake, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. Besides the barn, 350 bushels threshed oats, three or four stacks of grain, one horse and nearly all his farm machinery were destroyed. Loss about $800, partially insured.

W. R. Bennett's, residence at Reed's Landing was entered by burglars who got away with $205 secreted in the bed, a gold watch valued at $50, diamonds and other jewelry valued at $370.

William Wimner brought suit against Thomas Brennan to recover the sum of $99, the value of a dog which Brennan killed. Brennan is a policeman at St. Cloud, and has a valuable canine which got into a fight with Wimner's dog, and was evidently getting the worst of it, when Brennan shot the dog belonging to Wimner.

Two masked men held up a Hamline street car, the last one to leave St. Paul, and relieved the conductor of $10 and a gold watch. The police of St. Paul arrested Dennis Flinn and William Cosgrove on suspicion of having done the deed. When he was captured Flinn drew a paper mask from his pocket and endeavored to tear it up before the officers could interfere. The mask was preserved, however, and will be used as evidence. Cosgrove is about 21 and well known to the police.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Salpicon de Carne: Cut cold meat into half-inch cubes; boil and chop an onion and add to it the meat. To this add olives, fresh marjoram, and parsley. Dress with a plain salad dressing and serve.—Harper' Bazar.

—To Wash Floors: A teaspoon of kerosene added to the soap and water in which floors are to be washed will greatly help in making them clean, and will leave the paint fresh and bright. Much less soap is, of course, used.—Housekeeper.

—Flies on Gilt Frames: Boil three or four onions in a pint of water; then with a gilding brush go over the frames of your pictures and mantelglasses. Flies will not light on articles washed with the solution, which will do no injury to the frames.—Housekeeper.

—A Puree of Apricots: Take six halves of apricots or peaches, simply press them through a colander; put them in a saucepan with a half cup of boiling water, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and stir constantly until it comes to boiling point, pour over the fritters and serve at once.—Household News.

—Almond Horseradish Sauce: Blanch and chop very fine twenty-four Jordan almonds. Press from the vinegar four tablespoonfuls of horseradish; add to it the yolk of one egg, half a teaspoonful of salt and the almonds; mix well, and then stir in one cup of whipped cream—that is, one cup after it is whipped.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Onion Sauce: Peel four large onions, put them into a stewpan, cover with water, and boil till half done, then pour off the water and add fresh; when boiled tender, strain off the second water, put the onions on a board and chop finely. Melt in a saucepan one ounce of butter; mix in half an ounce of flour, and stir it over the fire for one minute: then pour in gradually half a pint of milk, stir until it boils and thickens, add the onion with a saltspoonful of salt, simmer for a few minutes, and serve hot. Time, about one hour.—Leeds Mercury.

—Balls for Fish Soups: Pick the meat from a lobster, with all the soft part, and pound it fine in a mortar; then mix with it one small head of celery boiled soft and drained, one-fourth of a pint of bread crumbs, a seasoning of salt, pepper and nutmeg, and the yolk of one hard-boiled egg. Pound it all together for ten minutes. Warm a good-sized piece of butter and add it to the lobster mixture, with two well-beaten eggs. Dust a little flour over your hands and roll the mixture into small balls. Fry them in butter and serve them in fish soups.—Boston Budget.

—Sardine Salad: One box of sardines, two bunches of celery. Mayonnaise. Drain the oil from the sardines by laying each fish on soft tissue-paper, turning the sardine first on one side, then on the other, until the grease is absorbed by the paper. Separate and wash the celery, using only the finest, whitest stalks. Cut each piece into inch-lengths, season with pepper, salt and vinegar. Pile these pieces into a small pyramid upon a glass platter, and lay the sardines about the base of the mound. Pour gently over all a thick mayonnaise.—Home Queen.

HAMMOCKS TO SLEEP IN.

For the Summer Home They Are Ideal Nests of Repose.

Why spend lots of money buying beds for the summer cottage, or why sleep uncomfortably on the wretched beds supplied? Try a hammock. It is delightfully comfortable, takes up little room at night, need take up none in the day, and costs very little. Besides, there are sure to be more friends than can have beds in the summer, but if it's hammocks, the little cottage can boast a hospitality as elastic as the occasion requires. One small room, that won't hold a bed, will swing three hammocks, all the heads going on one hook, the other ends being bestowed as the room permits. Any hammock will do, but the best one is the regular sailor laddy's canvas hammock. Two widths of single sail cloth make a luxurious bed hammock. They are made without stretchers, and the ends are firmly lashed with small cord, run through cord-finished holes, a heavy ring being set in at the end. The hooks must be put up with screws, for nails are not safe.

To make up the hammock for sleeping, first, a comforter, then another, and a little blanket won't hurt. These should be wider than the hammock is, and their weight should stretch the hammock out quite flat. Now, the sheet, then the pillow, to help hold the hammock flat, next the top sheet, and a pair of blankets, and, if you want to be very swell, a spread. Whether you have the spread or not an extra comforter should go over the foot. All this sounds like lots of clothes, but most folks are used to sleeping on top of a mattress that is impervious to cold, while the little cottage or camping-out house is often more chilly in summer than warm, else why go away for the summer.

There is art in getting one's self snugly into a hammock and that must be learned. You swing yourself between the sheets, the canvas promptly caves down delightfully, putting you into a cozy pocket. Now you must roll to one side and tuck the overhanging clothes under, then the other way, and tuck the other side under you. Now up with your feet and down with them again, with the clothes well under them, and there you are as snug as a pair of bugs under a rug. The extra comforter pulls up in the night if needed, and may hang loose. After you have learned these hammock tricks you will never be willing to sleep in a big, uncomfortable bed again, and nothing will seem more delicious than the sway that comes in the night time when you turn over. Day by day the clothes can be hung on a nail behind the door, and the hammock may swing with both ends from one hook. Try it.—Philadelphia Times.

Table Padding.

A new padding for covering dining-tables is knitted by machinery. By some housewives it is preferred to a cover of Canton flannel. Other real conveniences in housekeeping are a little raisin-seeder that will seed a pound of raisins in fifteen minutes, a nice little ice-shaver that prepares ice for summer drinks without wasting it, and that costs only thirty cents, and a sterilizing thermometer to test the temperature of a baby's bath, food or sterilized milk.—N. Y. Post.

THE DEAR LITTLE PATH.

There's a dear little path at the end of the road,
And where do you think it goes?
It wanders away at its own sweet will,
Off through the woods and over the hill,
And down where the river flows.

The prim old road lies paved and curbed,
While the lamps at either side
March out in a line by night and day
To the noisy town so far away,
Where never a flower can hide.

Two at the end stand quite amazed
At the little path's careless ways;
But, waiting beyond is the marguerite,
The bluebird's nest and the springing wheat,
And it never stops nor stays.

Oh, the dear little path! I like it best,
Springtime, summer and fall,
Though it runs through the brambles or into the swamp,
It is dearer to me than the stately pomp
Of the road with its sentinels tall.
—G. P. Du Bois, in Chicago Record.

A PARALYTIC CURED.

His Grandfather, a Revolutionary Soldier, and His Father Both Died of Paralysis, Yet the Third Generation Is Cured—The Method.

From the Herald, Boston, Mass.

Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky, a stroke of paralysis came to Mr. Frank T. Ware, the well-known Boston auctioneer and appraiser, at 235 Washington street. He went to bed one night about six years ago, seemingly in robust health. When he awoke his left side was stiffened by the deadening of the nerves.

The interviewer sought out Mr. Ware to get the facts. He gave the interesting particulars in his own way:

"The first shock came very suddenly while I was asleep, but it was not lasting in its effects, and in a few weeks I was able to be about. A few months after, when exhausted by work and drenched with rain, I went home in a very nervous state. The result was a second and more severe shock, after which my left arm and leg were practically helpless.

"My grandfather, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and lost an arm in the struggle for American independence, died finally of paralysis. My father also died of paralysis, although it was complicated with other troubles, and so I had some knowledge of the fatal character of the disease which is hereditary in our family. After the second shock I took warning, for, in all probability, a third would carry me off.

"Almost everything under the sun was recommended to me, and I tried all the remedies that seemed likely to do any good, electricity, massage and specialists, but to no effect.

"The only thing I found that helped me was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I verily believe that if it hadn't been for those pills I would have been dead years ago.

"Yes, I still have a slight reminder of the last attack six years ago. My left arm is not as strong as the other and my left foot drags a little, as the paralysis had the effect of deadening the nerves. But I can still walk a good distance, talk as easily as ever, and my general health is splendid. I am really over seventy years old, although I am generally taken to be twenty years younger than that.

"The Pink Pills keep my blood in good condition, and I believe that is why I am so well, although cheerfulness may help.

"I have thought of it a great many times and I honestly believe that the Pink Pills have saved my life."

Mr. Ware has every appearance of a perfectly healthy man, and arrives at his office promptly at eight o'clock every morning, although he has reached an age when many men retire from active life. His experience is well known to a great many people in Boston, where his constant cheerfulness has won him hosts of friends. He says that in his opinion both his father and grandfather could have been saved if Pink Pills had been obtainable at that time.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., at 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

PRECCCIOUS PREACHERS.

Infatile Evangelists Should Be Restrained for Religion's Sake.

This sort of infant phenomenon is so numerous in the south that the Memphis Commercial Appeal says "they are becoming a nuisance, causing men of thought to become very tired. Those who encourage them are making a travesty of the most sacred of human concerns. The first one naturally created a sensation. The number has been increasing every year, until now, as in the case with the English sparrows, there must be found a way to abate them, or the cause of Christianity will suffer.

A study of several of these boy preachers and of their careers enables us to explain them to our own satisfaction, at least. They know nothing of human life. Sometimes they are converted, and sometimes they are not, but when they are not they think they are. They imtiate the manner and tones, easily absorbing the words, ideas and hymns of those who surround them, are flattered by attentions, becoming abnormally active mentally, but never produce an original thought, and seldom utter anything that would attract the slightest attention were they not so young.

Numbers of the earliest Methodist preachers began at the age of seventeen or eighteen, but few as early as fifteen; for it was the opinion of Bishop Asbury that they should be kept humble, and not allowed to advance beyond the rank of exhorter for some years. John Wesley held the same view, and was particularly anxious that no precocious children should be flattered. Indeed, his whole policy was to keep them back. Nevertheless he mistook some instances as specially raised up of God that greatly deceive him in the outcome.

Now and then in the musical world there is a phenomenon who holds on, and develops to the close of his life—generally short—increasing in merit and fame. There are just about as many successful boy preachers, in proportion to the whole number of precocious youth, as they are of transcendent geniuses in the musical sphere. One peculiarity is always noticeable where there is reason to believe them sincere—the rythmical character of their speech. Owing to their youth any excitement of the brain and nervous system tends to produce tears; hence, as they speak, become rythmical, and the tears flow, it is a pathetic scene. Mothers look upon them: "Oh, that my boy were there." Sisters repine that their brothers are not capable of such deeds. Some one rises and exclaims: "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God hath perfected praise," and all the handkerchiefs are drawn out.

But in a few years a wonder comes to light. These same boy preachers often become the driest and least effective of speakers. Their lachrymal glands are like thirsty springs in the desert. We have known several of them to dry up and have to leave the ministry. Others have retained the habit of eye-wiping after the last tear has been dry for many a long month, and in some instances have developed a sniffle, summoning the membranes of the proboscis to supply what would no longer flow from the tear-dimmed eye. —N. Y. Christian Advocate.

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE.

—Get your winter suits made at John Brandsers before the rush begin's. 1w.

—Mrs. VanCleve and the other ladies advertised to speak here last Sunday evening did not come on account of the rain.

—Saturday night and Sunday the rain fell almost continually. The best soaking the ground has had this year was the consequence.

—Several carloads of coal were unloaded here this week and those who use that fuel are now ready for "chill Novembers surly blasts."

—We noticeed farmer J. D. Young going by the office one day this week carrying a couple of onions that would doubtless, have taken the premium at the County Fair, This has been a great year for vegetables.

—Dr. Walter performed a difficult surgical operation Monday on a horse of William Dannehr's that had his leg cut a couple of months ago on some machinery. The Doctor is quite dextrous in the use of the scalpel.

—We are in receipt of a postal card from B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, who has gone to California for the winter. His many friends will be glad to learn that he arrived safe and sound. His address now is, Pasadena, Cal.

—From the Annandale post we learn that the collision near that place last week was much worse than generally reported. Mrs. Roberts, of N. Dak. on her way home had her hip dislocated; and her four year old daughter was badly hurt in the back.

—Rev. J. W. Powell did not preach his farewell sermon Sunday evening because of the smallness of the audience on account of rain; but contented himself with a few pointed remarks to the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League members present.

—This number ends Volumn Seven of the GAZETTE. Subscribe now; and pay one year in advance, and in addition, the ammount necessary, as seen by our Clubbing List, and get your Winter's reading, and have your subscription begin with No. 1, Vol. VIII, of the GAZETTE.

—The street lamps should be fixed up so that they will give light when they are most needed. Last Sunday night was dark, and rainy and the wind was quite strong, and people who attended church had to find their way home as best they could, as the lights were not visible.

—If the Delano street committee would haul the dirt from Lewis hill onto Mrs. Johnson's lot and fill it up to grade it would look a little better to the public than it does to haul it on to private property of the street committee. For gaul the present administration takes the cake.

—As John Elliott, of North Rockford was on his way home from Waverly on Monday, Sept. 16, and near the residence of James Stoddart, his horses turned out of the road and threw him to the ground, his head striking a snag or something, which fractured his nasel bone and made a punctured wound from which it was found difficult to keep the blood from flowing.

—We learn from exchanges that Litchfield has organized a Business Men's Association, with over a hundred members. It is proposed to work for the advancement of the interests of the city. Why can not Delano have a Business Men's Association, to talk over the affairs of the village occasionally, and to take part in having the best interests of the village advonced?

—We are here and ready to make you a nice suit. JOHN BRANDSER.

—Thomas Shaw found an umbrella: Owner can have for pay for this notice.

—C. J. Buckley shipped his honsehold goods Wednesday to St. Paul, where he has established himself in business.

John Teichnor returned home Friday, from Larimore, where he has been with a crew of men at work.

Among those who visited the County Fair Thursday, were Miss Francis Bauman and Miss Mary Dunn.

Among Our Exchanges.

Some of the Republican papers seem to forget that the laws under which the administration must administer the nations finances, are Republican laws.—St. Cloud Times,

The principal thing needed to make Democratic success next year a certainty is party harmony. With harmony the party can win; without harmony it cannot possibly win. — St. Cloud Times.

The curfew ordinances that are being enacted by many of the villages of Minnesota may be a good thing in a way, but we will venture the prediction that they will last very quick and be a dead letter in nine out of ten towns adopting them before a year rolls round.—Sherburne County Star-News.

County Cullings.

Among the names of those drawn to serve as United States Jurors, at Duluth commencing Oct. 8, we find Henry Bock, Delano; James McDonald, Charles O'Hara, Waverly; S. R. Wells, Buffalo; John R. Cunningham, Rockford: from this vicinity.

From the Representative we learn that Harold W. Roll, formerly editor of the Cokato Commoner, but recently of the Democrat, of Flagstaff, Arazona, died in the Paquin Institute, St. Louis Mo. on the 18th inst. of Bright's disease Mr. Roll was a man of good ability and had many friends in this county.

H. Tanner has an article in last week's Waverly Tribune on the re-districting of the county into commissioner districts. He praises Mr. Moland for his intelligence and fairness; but winds up by concluding that in suggesting the division he did Mr. Moland had "fallen into the hands of politicans who understand the drift of his proposals far better than he does himself," we presume H. L. M. will further enlighten the community in regard to those matters soon.

Monticello has been afflicteted once more with Diphtheria. The family of Mr. S. S. Sutherland we are informed has lost three members in a few weeks past. The only way to prevent a spread in such cases is to quarantine and disinfect, thoroughly. And those who do these things should have their pay for doing them; And then, they are far more apt to be done as they should be than when left to unresponsible and careless parties; or when the pay is not forthcoming; or is nothing adequate to the work done.

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., has succeeded in making for himself a reputation, out of town it seems. We have been informed that a few weeks ago the Chairman of County Commissioners telegraphed him to the effect that the county orders were now ready to sign; and asking if he should go over and sign them. But no answer was received, and Mr. Kemper had to act on his own judgement in the matter. Who would have thought Mr. I. G. would have lost so fine an opportutity to give advice in such an important matter?

Through some mistake an article from the Anandale Post concerning the Wright County Fair appared in our columns last week without having proper credit. We now give it as it should have been:

"The County Fair has been over-stimulated in the direction of racing—five or six hundred dollars having been appropriated for that purpose. It is largely dependent upon all of us to do everything that we can toward redeeming it from this feature: and we hope the people in this portion of Wright County will exert every energy toward gathering material for exhibitions. If you have nothing to exhibit encourage your neighbor who has."—Annandale Post.

A Woman Who Thinks Bloomers are Inartistic.

MISS FLORENCE DANGERFIELD, Lawyer.

DOUBTLESS the bloomer costume is excellent if we regard it from the point of view of utiliy only; but beauty or, at least, attractiveness, is an important thing in this world, and I have yet to see the bloomer costume that is beautiful or even attractive. All the gracefull lines of the figure are destoyed, and there is a masculine effect which is certainly not artistic. I dont approve of women wearing clothes resembling those of men. Men are supposed to have more intellectual power than women, and if this is true it is all right to emulate them in their mental attributes of concentration and grasp of subjects, and to go a step bevond them, if possible, in intellectuality. But let us avoid imitating them in their wearing apparel. Womanliness is most important in a woman, and I believe she can combine a strong intellect with a womanly nature. She need not be, and should not be, mannish in appearauce. And even on the score of convenience I do not think it necessary to resort to bloomers in riding a wheel. I am a cyclist, and have found short skirts which are light at the hips and loose about the knees perfectly satisfactory. We must remember, however, that feminine bicycling is in its infaney, and therefore it is hardly probable that the final form of the cycling dress has yet been reached. I have no doubt that the future will evolve a costume which will combine utility and attractiveness. — From "Shall Wheelwomen Wear Bloomers?" in Demorest's Magazine for October.

The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription: it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the fairer sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and you will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put you in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

Bloomers.

The bloomer craze, locally, has started the poets. The contribution below is one of the first crop.

The women down at Minneapolis have got the bloomer craze;
They're ridin' on bicycles an' bleckin' all the ways;
They say it makes them healthy, an' they're goin' for it strong,
An' the men are makin' biscuits an' cussin' all day long.

Bicycles an' bloomers—
Never saw the like;
Never is no tellin'
Where lightnin's goin' to strike.

The women down at Minneapolis have got the bloomers right;
They're spinnin' down the big road an' goin' out of sight;
They're done with foreign missions—church fairs are goin' wrong;
An' the men are mindin' babies an' cussin' all day long.

Bicycles an' bloomers—
Gittin' wuss an' wuss;
Lord knows where we'll get to
Before they're done with us.

The women down at Minneapolis—they're goin with a will;
They're racin' with the railroad trains an' rollin' down the hill;
They've got the reddest bloomers—their bicycles are strong,
An' the men wear "Mother Hubbards" an' cuss the whole day long.

Bicycles an' bloomers—
All the men are goners,
Dont know what we'er comin' to—
Lord have mercy on us! C. A. G.

THE much landed arbitration policy dosn't seem to be working very well lately. Nearly every nation is either at war or talking of going to war.

THE citizens of Chicago have passed a strong resolution asking the United States to recognize the Cubans as belligerents. Much enthusiasm was shown at the meeting Let the good work go on.

WE undrstand that Fountain Lake, near Montrose, is drying up. This is caused by the tearing away of the dam that kept the water in the lake. This lake and dam are government property and the people who tore out the dam should be prosecuted, as so many of the farmers in that vacinity rely on the lake for water.

THE Spaniards don't seem to be getting along very well in Cuba. They have lost two warships and seem to have, as a Mindeapolis paper remarks "more officers than private soldiers," Sec'y Olney informed the Spanish minister that if the Cuban trouble was not settled in three months the United States would take a hand.

WE used to boast of the fact that we recognized no titled aristocracy or class distinctions. But are we not now departing from that principle? The daughters of the American millionares are willing to marry old titled counts and bankrupt lords, and our public officers and private citizens as well are titled with military and feudal cognomens.

SOME unscrupulous person went into the Evening Tribune's typerooms last week and inserted a line of obscene matter into the columns of the paper that had been proofed. The Tribune offers a reward of one thousand dollars for the arrest and conviction of the guilty party. We hope he will be found and prosecuted to the extent of the law Such tricks should be severely punished.

THE leislatture of Texas has at last decided what to do in regard to prize-fighting. They have passed a law making it an offence punishable with a five years imprisonment. At last we are sure that there wont be a fight this year at Dallas. Prize-fighting is one of the most brutal exibitions ever shown in our country and we arr glad the Texas people realize the fact and have shut down on it. If all the legislatures were as sensible as the Texas one, prize-fighting would soon be a "lost art."

Settlers May Loose Homes.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Secretary Smith has refused to accept a relinquishment offered by the governor of the state of Minnesota of certain lands granted to the state for the Hastings and Dakota railway. The case is of more than ordinary importance. The company did not earn the lands in time, but as congress never declared a forfeiture it is held that the lands could not be forfeited. The company sold its road to the Milwaukee and St. Paul company, but retained its lands.

The legislatnre of Minnesota declared the charter of the Hastings and Dakota forfeted and the company went out of existence. But by the operation of the Minnesota constitution it for all legal purposes for three years, during which time the lands were assigned to Russell Sage, the principal stockholder.

Settlers to the number of 225 have occupied a portion of the lands and about 50,000 acres are in dispute. In 1894 the legislature of Minnesota passed a bill authorizing the governor of Minnesota to relinquish the lands to the United States, which would make them public lands and secure the rights of settlers upon them. Secretary Smith rejects the relinquishment. The cases of the settlers will now be decided upon their individual merits. —St. Clond Times.

Late Literary News.

Rudyard Kipling makes his last appearance as a teller of Jungle Stories in THE COSMOPOLITAN for October. "Mowgli Leaves the Jungle Forever," and the curtain is drawn over one of the most charming conceits in literature. In the same number in which Mowgli makes his final adieux, appears for the first time before an American audience, the nowfamed Richard Le Gallienne in a plea for religion under the title of "The Griatness of Man." A very important paper on "State Universities" is contributed to this number by Professor Ely. And among the story-tellers are Hopkinson Smith and Boyesen. No more beautiful work has ever appeared in any magazine than the marvelous illustrations of Cabrinety used as a frontispiece and accompanying the prose poem by Mrs. Cardozo. Drake—who is said to de Kipling's favorite artist for his Jungle Stories—Carter Beard, Osterland, Denman, and Kemble, are among those who contribute a wealth of illustration to this number. The Cosmopolitan announces that it will begin the publication in January of THE AGRICULTURIST'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, to be fully the equal of THE COSMOPOLITAN, but containing from sixteen to twenty pages by the ablest agricultural writers of the world, upon subjects of importance to the agricultural, horticulturist, and stock-growing interests.

The Republic of Jones.

"There was a government in existence within the limits of my state during the late war that I find no mention of in histories," said Mr. Holden of Mississippi. "In the early days of secession the county of Jones, through its leading citizens, withdrew from the Confederacy, declared themselves a free and independent people, organized a government, adopted a constitution modeled after that of the United States, called this new government 'The republic of Jones,' elected a president and a full quota of officeals and refused to furnish men or money to th southern cause. On the approach of confederate troops they would retreat to the swamps and other inaccessable places and remain in hiding till the danger had passed. They keep up this queer attitude of hostility to their own brethern, so far as I am informed, to the close of the war, but the republic of Jones passed out of the memory of men with the event of Appomattox, and the mention of it now in that locality is only a cause for smiles."—Washington Post.

Ex-President Harrison is a somewhat belated but a very outspoken exponent of the theory that it is right to "do evil that good may come." He would have the drastic and despotic excise laws of New York rigidly enforced so that the party responsible for that law, may be defeated in the next state election, on the theory that a little more experience with Tammany is necessary for the education and purigation of the people of the metropolis. He would revive and turn loose upon society the ravening tiger as a measure of reform discipline.—Minneapolis Times.

An exchange says that "a cigarette is a large roll of paper, tobacco and drugs with a small fire at one end, a large fool at the other. Some of its chief enjoyments are condensed nightmare, fits, cancers of the lips and stomach, spinal meningitis, softening of the brain, funeral processions and families shrouded in gloom. There are plenty of subjects left, however, who are perfectly willing to undergo the trials of such a nature for the sake of putting on a certain amount of style.

Queer Shampoo.

In one of the hotel barber shops a small Italian boy named Joe officiates with a whisk broom. The other day, says the Buffalo Enpress, the hotel housekeeper sent down to the proprietor of the shop and asked him to fix her up a bottle of shampoo. He fixed it and told Joe to take it up to the housedeeper.

"You tell her," said the barber, "to take half a teacup of the shampoo and put it in two teacups of water and apply."

Joe took the shampoo and went up to the housekeeper with it. In a short time he came back, and the barber asked: "Give it to her all right?"

"Yes," said Joe.

"With the directions?"

"Yes," said Joe again.

Half an hour later the barber noticed the housekeeper out in the hall, looking into the shop. He walked out where she was.

"Hello," she said. "Which is it? Are you drunk or crazy?"

"What do you mean?" asked the barber, with much dignity.

"You must be one or the other, judging from the message you sent up with that shampoo."

"What message did I send?

"Joe told me you said to tell me to make a cup of tea and put it in the bottle and lie about it!"—Aitkin Republican.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.
WASHINGTON, Sept. 27, 1895

Secretary Olney very naturally declines to discuss the possibilities of an early changed in the attitude of this government toward the Cuban revolutionists; but recent happenings have made a subject of discussion among those democrats who may express their opinion without a breach of international etiquette or of diplomatic usage and they are doing it. Among the things which indicate the drift of democratic sentiment outside of Washington is the frequency with which democratic assemblages have of late been adopting resolutions in favor of free Cuba, the latest and most conspicious instance being the New York state democratic convention. It was noted also with pleasuae that Senator Gray, of Delaware, was instrumental, as their chief counsel, in getting the Cubans recentaly arrested near Wilmington, Delaware, as filibusters, released. Of course it was in his capacity as a lawyer, and not as chairman of the Senate committee on Foreign Relations, that Senator Gray befriended those Cubans, but all the same it has been taken as a straw indicating much It is argued that Senator Gray would not have become the counsel of those Cubans if he had not personaly sympathized with them, and his relations with President Cleveland are such that he would hardly haye engaged in the case, even though his personal sympathy had been with the accused men and the cause they represented, if he had not known the inclinations of the administration to lean the same way. A public meeting in favor of free Cuba is being talked up in Washington and will probably shortly be held. Many democrats hope to see the administration act before the matter comes up in congress, as it is certain to do very early in the session.

If proof were needed that the Harrison boom is dead it is furnished by the frequency with which republicans of prominence who come to Washington give it a kick. Its latest kicking was administered by Ex Senator Sabin, of Minn., who was once chairman of the republican National committee. Mr. Sabin says he thinks Harrison ceased to be a Presidential possibility the moment it was certain that Quay and Platt would control the Pennsylvania and New York delegations to the republican convention. He also thinks that Reed is going to have a walkover for the nomination, or says he does.

According those who are usually posted on the inside republican happenings, Mr. Foraker of Ohio, has with Gov. McKinley's consent made a direct bid to win Boss Platt over to the support of McKinley's Presidential aspirations. It is well known that Platt was in 1888 promised on behalf of Mr. Harrison that he should should be Secretary of the Treasury, a place that Platt has been hankering after for many years, if he would support Harrison. Harrison repudiated that promise, claiming that it was made without his knowledge or concent, and thereby made a lifetime enemy of Platt. Mr. Foraker has now made the same promise for Gov. McKinley and has told Mr. Platt that McKinley would make it in person if Mr. Platt would agree to swing the New York delegation to McKinley after a complementary vote is cast for Gov. Morton, who is generally regarded as nearly a brevet candidate for the nomination. Foraker will also befor he returns to Ohio endeavor to make a deal whereby he can secure the suport of Boss Quay for McKinley. Reed has been reported to have a mortage upon both Platt and Quay, but they are very trickey individuals, and will both be found on the side of the candidate who offers them the most.

Ex Representative Outwait, of Ohio, brings cheerful news from that State. He "I have been greatly surprised at the way in which the democratic party in Ohio has rallied and got into fighting condition. There is none of the feeling that provailed last fall in Ohio now among democrats. They are a unit, and the gubernatorial campaign will be one of the hottest the state has known. The silver question has been put aside for the present by Ohio democrats. I do not mean to say that they have decided to lay aside every consideration that may interfere with its making a strong fight."

The Modern Cowboy.

Many people have a mistaken idea that to be a cowboy, a man must dress in buckskin clothes, wear his hair long, and carry two or three six-shooters. As a matter of fact a cowboy is, as a rule, a very ordinary looking person. He wears a broad hat, to protect himself from the boiling sun of the plains, has his hair cut in a very civilized manner, wears an old flannel shirt, overalls, high heeled boots, and spurs. Some of them carry six-shooters, or large revolvers, but this is not necessary nor is it the rule as formerly, The modern cowboy has as great a respect for the law, whether moral or otherwise, as any class of people living. Of course the life is a wild one and the men are accustomed to bear all kinds of hardships. They are often in the saddle from 36 to 40 hours at a time without food or sleep.

During the summer the men rise at three o'clock, have breakfast at half past and are in the saddle and out on the range before most people are awake, they ride until noon and then gather to the wagon for dinner. It is a curious sight to see from twenty to thirty men squatting around the campfire, each with a tin plate, tin cup, knife and fork and spoon, and eating as fast as possible. The horses are left standing around near camp. Everyone has to help himself, as the "grub" is left in the pots and kettles in which it was cooked. As soon as the men are through eating, the boy who herds the saddle horses, or "wrangler" as he is called, brings in the "bunch" and the men at once "rope" fresh horses, saddle up and are off "on circle" as it is called. They usually have supper about sundown and after supper preparations for retireing are at once begun.

Each cowboy is supplied with a bed consisting of a "tarp" or bed-sheet, of heavy watar-proof canvas, about seven feet wide and sixteen feet long, several pairs of blankets and a quilt or two. for a pillow he uses his clothes bag or "war sack." The bedding is placed between the folds of the "tarp" thus making a bed which will keep out the wet in case of rain. All cowboys sleep with their heads covered.

This wild, rough life has one very good advantage; it will make a person healthy and strong. A man who has spent many years over a desk or in a school room would find it most beneficial to his health if he would go west and spemd a year or two among the cowboys. He need not loose his refinement and culture but instead would by his example help the cowboys to gain those most desireable qualities.

Too Much Rich Food.

"We know something of the inside of a country printing office," says an exchange. "Money comes in with painful slowness. Hence the editor's table does not always groan under the weight of rich food. This 'crumb' is in point."

Whatever may be the truth or falsity of the stories that are told of the scarsity of funds in a country editor's pocket or the scarsity of food in his stomach, the stories are always told, and neither the progress of education nor the development of the press seems to have any effect on the crop.

One of the latest comes from Kentucky, where the mountain editor, at least, rarely develops into a Cræsus or an Apicius, and this one is concerning a mountain editor. A subscriber had remembered him very kindly and a day or two later a visitor called at his office.

"Can I see the editor?" he asked of a grimy little lad roosting on a high stool.

"No sir," replied the youth on the stool. "He's sick."

"What's the matter with him?"

"Dun'no," said the boy. "One of our subscribers gave him a bag of flour and a bushel of pertaters t'other day, and I reckon he's foundered."—Epworth Herald.

A bushel of Corn.

A bushel of corn makes four gallons of whiskey, which retails for $16. Out of this the government gets $8, the railroads $1 60, the manufacturer $4, retailer $7, the farmer 40 cents and the consumer the delirium tremens.—Exchange.

It is enough to give a sober man the delirium tremens to study those figures.

If the farmers were only intelligent enough, and organized as they should be, they would get the $7 and the barkeeper the 40 cents. Or, better still, the corn would not be made into whiskey at all. —Representative.

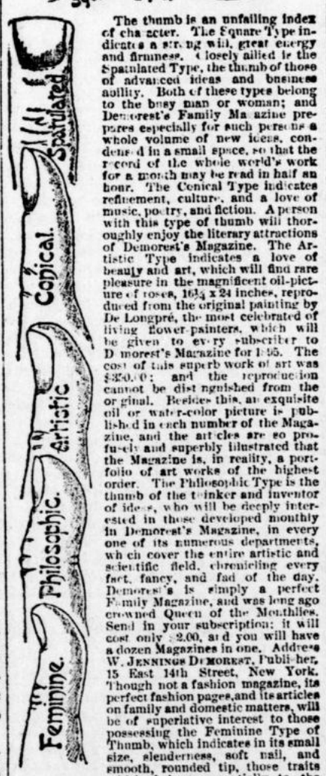
WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
Square Type.



The thumb is an unfailing index of character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness, closely allied to the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpre, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $250.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and fad of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines in one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion pages, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the fairer sex, every one of whom should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and it will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put it in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.

ATLANTA, Ga., is the only city in the United States that has a house constructed wholly of paper from foundation to chimney.

THE Fighting Cocks, an inn at St Alban's, Hertfordshire, lays claim to being the oldest inhabited house in England. It is known to be more than 1,125 years old.

THE trustees of Flushing, L. I., ordained that bicycle riders should use larger bells hereafter, and now the bicycle riders are using dinner gongs. And still the Flushing people are not satisfied.

A CHICAGO man has invented a steel spring tire, which he believes will succeed the pneumatic tire. This great achievement was in response to a demand for a contrivance which can not be punctured.

BISMARCK has $175,000 annual income from various industries in which he is interested. Under the circumstances, the old gentleman can afford to stand a good deal of marble heart from the war lord of Deutschland.

FEMALE inventors are, according to the patent office reports, adhering to the lines of the old rather than the new woman. Out of 400 patents granted to women in 1894, 158 were for wearing apparel and 100 for cooking utensils.

AN invention provides for pneumatic seats in railway carriages. These may be readily inflated by means of a hose connected with the pipes of the air brake. In this manner may traveling be made a luxury at small permanent cost to the railway companies.

THE discovery that the "missing link" found by Prof. Wortman, of Columbia college, is the skeleton of a pet baboon does not lessen the value of the professor's find. It merely alters the matter a little, so that now, instead of proving that monkeys became men, it proves that a man can make a monkey of himself.

THE new German field marshal, Count von Waldersee, is said by his military friends to equal the celebrated Von Moltke as a tactician. The claim is undoubtedly correct. Field Marshal von Waldersee has an American wife, and what American women don't know about tactics is not worth taking into consideration.

THE number of vagrant women who are roaming the country seems to be larger than ever. A few years ago the female tramp was such a rarity that the appearance of one would justify a column newspaper story. Nowadays she is dismissed with a brief paragraph, if mentioned at all. If the new woman is to take her place among the ranks of tramps, it furnishes one more argument against her

FROM all quarters come reports of remarkably large freshmen classes entering our educational institutions. A number of colleges have the largest entering classes in their history. This is a substantial gain and extremely gratifying, but it has at least one drawback. Of the many young men now entering college, the large majority expect to enter professions already overcrowded. Many of them will be necessarily disappointed in their ambition.

PROGRESS in the art of balloon manufacture has not kept pace with other industries. The number of fatal accidents to balloons is as large to-day as it was forty years ago. The latest instance is the explosion of a balloon containing three men, who had ascended from Loschenbreek, Belgium. Experimental ascensions for scientific purposes may perhaps be excused, but under existing conditions it would not be a bad idea to interdict such exploits when merely carried out for amusement and gate money.

IT has been the custom of the officials of China when caught in a crime to behead a few coolies and call it punishing the criminals. Dr. Reid, the presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal church at Shanghai, says: "In our opinion the action required at this time is the appointment of a strong commission, with such rank and authority as will enable them to try and fix the guilt of the highest official. To punish a few coolies will be worse than useless. We must go to the source of these troubles, which is found in some of the highest officials of the empire."

TIMES change, the methods of fighting change with them. The army authorities are removing the old-fashioned guns at Fort Hamilton, New York harbor, and replacing them with modern weapons. The old guns are of 16 and 20-inch caliber, and the new ones much smaller. But the advance in the art of war is shown by the fact that while the old and ponderous pieces can throw shells only 2¾ miles the new and lighter guns will carry a projectile accurately a distance of 10 miles. Our country is making rapid progress in the manufacture of war weapons.

THE authorities of the Georgetown (D. C.) university have prohibited football. They made up their mind after the death of one of the students from injuries received in a football game. The officers of the university conclude that the parents of the students would rather have their children return alive without football honors than dead with them. Therefore football is tabooed utterly. If the students want to give baseball and other athletic sports more time than they have been giving to them there will be no objection. The officers have decided that football is inherently brutal.

AN IRISH REPUBLIC.

Sons of Erin in America Advocate Drastic Measures.

The New Movement Means Open Warfare on England—Plans of Leaders Partially Disclosed at the Chicago Convention.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—Birth was given by the Irish national convention Thursday afternoon to an organization which has for its avowed object the liberation of Ireland from England's yoke by a policy of physical force.

Nothing was done by the convention at the morning session owing to the delay on the part of the committee on resolutions in agreeing to a report. When the delegates reassembled at 3 o'clock the committee on ways and means and plan of organization presented its report. The introductory was as follows:

"The new movement organization shall be known by the style and title of the Irish National Alliance.

"It shall have for its object the securing of the independence of Ireland by any means within its power consistent with the laws and usages of civilized nations.

"The qualifications for membership shall be good moral character, birth on Irish soil or descent from Irish parentage on paternal or maternal side, or both, and the taking of the following pledge:

"'I —— hereby pledge my word of honor to aid by every means within my power in conformity with the constitution and by-laws of the Irish national alliance in securing the independence of Ireland.'"

In subsequent paragraphs it was provided that the officers should consist of a president, vice president and treasurer, a secretary to be appointed by the president and an executive council of nine. It was provided that 75 per cent. of the gross receipts of the subordinate councils should be turned into the national treasury.

The report was accepted after some debate. The report of the committee on platform and resolutions was presented by O'Neil Ryan, of St. Louis, and was unanimously adopted amid great cheering. It reads thus:

"The people of Ireland are a sovereign people. Ireland is by nature separate from every other country, and liberty is the birthright of her people. Ireland was known throughout Europe as a nation long before the dawn of Christianity, and was the home of civilization while England was still barbarous.

"England's claims to authority in Ireland originated in force and have been maintained by corruption and coercion: they have never ripened into a right to rule: the title to the conquest has never been perfected, inasmuch as the Irish people have continually by constitutional agitation or revolutionary movements resisted England's power and endeavored to destroy her unlawful supremacy.

"Ireland is deprived of almost every civil right which the American people most dearly cherish. Unexampled cruelty and brutal vindictiveness have been the distinguishing features of English rule in Ireland. England has destroyed Ireland's industries and ruined her commerce; she has placed upon her statute books laws making it a crime to educate an Irish child; she burned Ireland's school houses and destroyed her churches; she has driven into exile, or left to perish in her dungeons thousands of men whose only crime was their love of Ireland. Every measure for the last century looking towards legislative independence of the Irish people has either suffered defeat in the commons or been arbitrarily rejected by the lords. England has violated every treaty and broken every pledge, and with almost every year of the century she has imposed upon Ireland brutal laws of coercion, and one of the most drastic character is now upon her statute books.

"To the pleas of the people for justice and their prayers for mercy, England has responded with the scourge and the scaffold, and yet to-day, Ireland enthralled, but not enslaved, crushed, but not conquered, is in spirit a nation.

"It has become evident, after many years of earnest endeavor to obtain a measure of independence from the English government by peaceful agitation, that appeals to reason for justice are futile. It is left, therefore, for the men of the Irish race to proclaim again the truth recorded by all history that the liberties of a people in the independence of a nation cannot be achieved by debate, but must be won upon the field of battle, and we declare our belief that the men of Ireland who are being driven into exile, or into the graves of serfs in their native land, by English misgovernment are entitled by the laws of God and man to use every means in their power to drive from their country the tyrants and usurper, and we believe that Ireland has the right to make England's difficulty her opportunity and to use all possible means to create that difficulty.

"In view of these facts, members of this convention appeal with confidence to their American fellow-citizens and all lovers of liberty to cooperate with them in aiding the people of Ireland in the achievement of the same measure of liberty enjoyed in these United States.

"Resolved, That we earnestly protest against the continued incarceration in English prisons of Irish patriots. That we consider it inhuman and against the policy of civilized nations to keep in prison men who have acted only in the interest of their country and human liberty; and that the release of these men is imperatively demanded, not only by the Irish people but by civilization.

"Resolved, That this convention expresses the hope that the people of Cuba, who are struggling for political independence and the establishment of a republic, will be successful, and that we extend to them our heartfelt sympathy.

"Resolved, That this convention, recognizing the importance to the Irish nation of preserving the language, literature and music of the people, commends the work now being done by the Gaelic league and the National Literary society in Ireland and by the Gaelic societies of this country, and earnestly trusts our people will give them hearty cooperation and generous support.

"Resolved, That this convention recommends the formation of military companies, wherever practicable, in order to foster and preserve the military of the Irish race, and to be prepared for action in the hour of England's difficulty."

Officers Chosen.

Nominations for officers and the executive council were next in order. Chairman Finerty declined to be considered as a candidate for president, and William Lyman, of New York, at one time treasurer of the Irish National league, was nominated by J. S. Keating, of Illinois, and elected by acclamation with equal unanimity. O'Neil Ryan, of St. Louis, was selected as vice president and State Senator P. V. Pitzpatrick, of Chicago, as treasurer. The executive council was constituted as follows: J. J. Donovan, Massachusetts; Chris Gallagher, Minnesota; Martin Kelly, Tennessee; Capt. Mangan, Wisconsin; J. Sheehy, California; J. M. Kennedy, Montana; T. J. Dunden, Ohio; J. S. Lawler, Texas; Thomas H. Greevy, Pennsylvania.

When the officers-elect were introduced, President Lyman promised that he would start the "work" forthwith; and Vice President Ryan declared that before many months the organization would be in the heart of London itself.

PASTEUR IS DEAD.

The Famous Bacteriologist Passes Away at Garches, in France.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—Prof. Louis Pasteur, the eminent bacteriologist, died Saturday evening at 5 o'clock at Garches, near St. Cloud, in the environs of this city. Prof. Pasteur had suffered from paralysis for a considerable period of time. About eight days ago he sustained a violent paralytic stroke, and Friday suffered still another severe attack. He grew worse rapidly and remained in a comatose condition during his last hours. The end was absolutely without pain. His wife devotedly watched his bedside. His son, his physician, his daughter and his son-

THE LATE PROF. PASTEUR.

in-law, M. Valleryradot, and two grandchildren, as well as Dr. Roux and Dr. Chantnesse, were present when he passed away.

Louis Pasteur was born at Dole, Jura, December 27, 1822, entered the university in 1840, became a supernumerary master of studies at the college of Benancon, was received as a pupil in the Ecole Normale in 1843, took the degree of doctor in 1847 and was appointed professor of physics at the faculty of sciences, Strasburg, in 1848. At the end of 1854 he was intrusted as dean with the organization of the newly created faculty of sciences at Lille, and in 1857 returned to Paris and undertook the "scientific direction" of the Ecole Normale. In December, 1863, he was appointed professor of geology, physics and chemistry at the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, and was elected a member of the institute. The Royal society of London in 1856 awarded M. Pasteur the Rumford medal for his researches relative to the polarization of light, etc. He was decorated with the Legion of Honor August 12, 1853, was promoted to be an officer of that order in 1863, and a commander in 1868.

M. Pasteur has written numerous works relating to chemistry and bacteriology, for which in 1861 he obtained the Jecker prize. In 1874 the national assembly accorded to M. Pasteur, as a reward chiefly for his investigations on fermentation, a life annuity of 12,000 francs. He was raised to the rank of grand officer of the Legion of Honor October 24, 1878.

His reception into the French academy took place April 27, 1882, when he delivered a panegyric on M. Littre, to whose chair he had succeeded. In the same year the council of the Society of Arts awarded the Albert medal of the society to M. Pasteur for his researches in connection with fermentation, the preservation of wines and the propagation of zynotic diseases in silk worms and domestic animals.

Of late years M. Pasteur has devoted himself to the study of inoculation of diseases other than smallpox, and has achieved some very remarkable results in the prevention of hydrophobia: patients from all parts of Europe, and even from America, traveling to Paris to put themselves under his care. Large subscriptions were raised in France to form an "Institute Pasteur," where the methods of the great discoverer could be practiced and taught.

July 1, 1889, a meeting was convened at the Mansion house in London for the purpose of hearing statements by Sir James Paget and others in favor of establishing a Pasteur institute in England. The prince of Wales contributed 100 guineas toward that object. A Pasteur institute has also been established in America under the direction of the pupils of Pasteur for the purpose of affording relief to Americans who could spare neither the time nor the money to make the trip to Europe for the purpose of placing themselves directly under the care of the great chemist.

The cholera epidemic of 1892 led M. Pasteur to institute experiments in anticholeraic vaccinations, which proved successful in the case of animals.

FAVOR INDEPENDENCE.

Chicagoans Avow Sympathy with the Cause of Cuban Revolutionists.

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.—Surrounded by patriotic mottoes, with the American flag as a background, the declaration of independence as a text book and the spirit of liberty as an inspiration, 4,000 persons yelled themselves hoarse Monday night in the cause of Cuban independence. There could scarcely have been more enthusiasm had the meeting been held in Cuba itself. Central music hall was not big enough to hold all the sympathizers and there was an overflow meeting in the auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association building. At both meetings the same resolutions were adopted and speeches were made by men prominent in civil affairs, all of whom uncompromisingly favored the freedom of the little island from the thralldom of Spain.

The resolutions express sympathy for the revolutionists; call on the United States to recognize them as belligerents, and ask other countries to join in making this demand. They begin with the best known paragraph in the declaration of independence and end with a determination to continue the work begun at Monday night's two big assemblages.

Messages of sympathy were read from Senator Culloin, Gov. Altgeld, of Illinois; Russell A. Alger, Mayor Pingree, of Detroit; Senator Call, of Florida; Mayor Bostwick, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Mayor Caldwell, of Cincinnati; Mayor Salmonson, of Tampa, Fla., and others.

In round figures the receipts were $27,500,000, and expenditures, $24,000,000. As compared with last September the receipts were nearly $5,000,000 greater, and expenditures, $4,500,000 less. Receipts from customs were slightly less than those of last September and from internal revenue they were nearly double. The greatest saving in expenditures was in the civil and miscellaneous account, which was less by nearly $3,000,000 than that of last September.

Editors at Toledo.

In the morning they visited various points of interest around the city and after dinner were taken to Fort Meigs where they were addressed by ex-Congressman Frank Hurd and others. In the evening the party was banqueted at the Boody house. Speeches were made by the mayor, Judge J. H. Doyle and several of the visiting editors.

IN BUSINESS CIRCLES.

Weekly Review of the Trade Situation by Dun.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"The full statement of about 2,800 commercial failures for the third quarter of 1895 will be published next week, and will show liabilities of about $30,000,000, of which about $11,000,000 have been of manufacturing and $17,000,000 of trading concerns. In the same quarter of last year the failures were 2,868, and the liabilities $29,411,196, of which $12,331,892 were of manufacturing and $15,181,239 of trading concerns. The week's reports are highly encouraging as to monetary matters, although exports of gold still continue and also as to the cotton manufacture, but not as satisfactory regarding iron, woolen, leather or silk manufactures.

"The speculaction in cotton has lifted the price five-eighths during the past week and quotations here are so much higher than at Liverpool that free exports cannot be expected. It seems no longer possible to hope for a good crop, and Meili Bros. have issued a circular predicting a yield of only 7,000,000 bales. The accounts of injury and loss grow more dismal each week and while they may be somewhat exaggerated, the general outlook is decided unfavorable. But for the extraordinary supplies carried over from last year, the manufacturer here and abroad would be in trouble. But prices of goods rise each week, adding to the profit of mills, which, on both sides of the ocean, can use for some time to come only cotton bought at low prices. It is not clear how far the consumption will support the manufacture at the present rate and at present prices for goods, though the demand from dealers is naturally urgent, while the market for the raw material is constantly rising. There is still some chance of a strike in Fall River mills, though the rise in prices will make it easier for the mills to grant some advance in wages.

"Nothing is clear about the iron and steel manufacture, but some of the largest Pittsburgh concerns, professing to have orders for many months ahead, are bidding for small contracts in eastern markets at $1 to $1.50 per ton less than the quoted rate. Some say that it is done to depress the market, and again it is thought that the object may be to buy materials, but contracts have been made at the east for 250,000 tons of foreign ore to be used in Bessemer iron making at eastern furnaces, and the termination of the Marquette strike sets free about 500,000 tons more of Bessemer ore within the period of lake navigation. The strike of coke workers at Connellsville seems to have been avoided. The Iron Age reasons that nothing can explain the situation except some large movement in steel rails not yet made known. For the first week in many months the average of prices of iron and steel products shows no change whatever, though the demand for finished products is distinctly reduced.

"The exports of gold, though not as large as they were some weeks ago, cause some disquiet in view of the disbanding of the bond syndicate. Money has gone to the interior rather largely, and there is considerable increase in volume of commercial loans. Stocks have slightly declined for railroads during the week, though the market shows much stubbornness, and trust stocks average 42 cents per share higher than a week ago, but are now growing stronger in tone.

"Failures for the week have been 216 in the United States against 235 last year, and 50 in Canada, against 55 last year."

CHINA YIELDS.

Delinquent Officials Punished for the Missionary Massacres.

PEKING, Sept. 30.—The British ultimatum in the matter of the Sze-Chuen riots has just been issued. Within fourteen days an edict must be issued degrading the viceroy of the province, otherwise the British admiral commanding will act. The American commission, consisting of the consul at Tien-Tsin and the naval officer, accompanied by Chinese soldiers and interpreters, are starting overland. The viceroy pays the French indemnity of 940,000 taels. Li Hung Chang has been appointed a commissioner to negotiate a commercial treaty with the Japanese.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1. — Minister Denby cabled the state department from Peking Monday as follows:

"Imperial decree issued. Abstract—responsibility for Sze-Chuen riots rests with officials. Viceroy Liu careless; took no notice of the beginning of the riots. He is deprived of office, never to be reemployed. Other officials to be punished."

This would seem to indicate that the crisis impending in China, involving a naval demonstration by the British forces, has been averted for a time at least by a compliance with the principal demand of the British. It cannot be learned whether the decree concedes all of the demands made, and the cablegram makes no reference to the sweeping conditions imposed by the British minister that the guilty officials be punished by suspension for three years on all promotions and appointments in the civil service in the province of Sze-Chuen.

THE MOUNTAIN.

Large-chested giant, shadowing the land,
With lazy limbs stretched out at length,
Covered with shag and gnarled with strength,
I watch thee day by day.
A hemlock hoar the stag of thy huge hand,
Driving along the accustomed upward trail
Thy flocks of mist that morn and even stay
Across the vale.

Pressing with sun-browned body earth's green couch,
The golden days of summer through,
With half veiled eyes of melting blue
O'er which the shadows flit—
What dreams are thine, that with a magic touch
Thy spirit to contentment they beguile,
And o'er thy brow, where rugged frowns might sit,
Persuade a smile?

When the empurpled curtain of the gloom
Drops slowly from its loosened cord,
Across her rose-flushed terrace toward
The purlieus of thy rest,
I watch the figure of the evening come,
One starry brooch upon her shoulder shining,
And lean upon thy broad and loving breast,
With arms entwining.

Warden art thou of all the trooping stars,
Through the hushed hours of night they wait
Upon the threshold of thy gate
Of pine trees that uprears
Itself against the sky. Oft, too, those bars
Behind, fresh from some fountain bath, is seen
The moon, when with her quiver she appears
A huntress queen.

WHERE STRENGTH HELPED.

BY ROBERT BEVERLY HALE.

SLOW at his books Tom Gordon certainly was; yet he had a good mind. It took him a long time to learn a lesson, but when he had once learned it, he never had to look at it again. In athletic sports, too, he was not brilliant, but he could be relied upon. He was like a stone wall at first base, though he was not so successful as a batter. In football he was not aggressive enough to suit his schoolfellows; but he was fearless, and he could carry an indefinite number of opponents on his back. In the tug of war he was unconquerable.

There was a story that, when Mr. Brown's school, with Tom for anchor, pulled the Normal Stars, Tom's three rope men, after having, with Tom's assistance, secured an extra foot or two, went off and got a drink of soda water, leaving Tom to mind the rope alone. Tom always denied this story, and I must confess that it sounds unlikely. I think the probability is that if they went away at all, they went away one at a time.

That day Tom pulled anchor, but generally he pulled on the rope. He was captain, of course; and his thundering "Ready!—Heave!!" was enough of itself to take away the strength of the other side. It was a great disappointment to Tom when Mr. Brown forbade the tug of war, on the ground that it injured the boys.

"I suppose it is bad for you," Tom was heard to say; "but a boy ought to learn how to keep his back straight and put his strength to a thing. He may have to lift something heavy some day."

For the rest, Tom was a tender-hearted fellow, who could not bear to hurt anyone. When he was a little boy in the sixth class, one of his classmates, mistaking gentleness for cowardice, forced Tom into a fight. Tom hit out so quickly that one knock settled the other fellow, and then he fell to crying because the blood came out of the little rascal's nose.

One evening after supper Tom took the electric cars and went in town on an errand for his father. His business accomplished, he set out to walk home; for, although a few flakes of snow had fallen, the night was fine, and he wanted to get some good fresh air into his lungs before sitting down to spend an evening with Cicero.

He had reached a deserted part of the street and was walking up a long hill not far from home when he saw coming toward him a heavy two-wheeled coal cart drawn by one horse. The wheels were on the car tracks; the driver's head had fallen over on his shoulder and he was fast asleep. Meanwhile the brave old horse plodded on with the contentment of a veteran in the coal business who has left his load of coal, whose driver is asleep, and who is going down hill on his way home.

From out of sight far along the street came the singing of the wires which means that an electric car is approaching. A moment later the car, coming on like mad, hove in sight some distance behind the coal cart. As it reached the summit of the hill and began the descent its speed did not abate.

Nearer and nearer it came, but the motor man did not seem to have any fear of running into the coal cart—he even turned round and said something to the conductor, who was standing behind him. Then he turned back again, but he turned too late. He was nearer than he thought. He jammed on the brake and reversed the power just as the old horse turned aside to draw the cart out of danger, but the tracks were covered with a little layer of snow, and the car wheels slid over them like the runners of a sleigh.

The whole weight of the car struck the corner of the coal cart and flung it from the tracks. The wagon fairly surged up in the air and came down on its side, with the man underneath it and the horse still in the shafts. Neither man nor horse stirred after they fell.

The conductor and driver were both unhurt. "This is a bad business, Phil, an' we'd better git out!" the driver said.

The conductor nodded and pulled the bell twice and the car swept away. The only passengers were three ladies, who probably did not know what had happened.

Tom was not a hundred feet away when the thing happened. His horror at the sight itself was not greater than his astonishment and anger when the car moved on. For the first time in his life he would have liked to have some one by the throat.

He rushed up to the cart excitedly. It had been thrown to the right of the track. The driver's leg was underneath one of the great wheels and he had evidently fainted, for he did not move nor speak. Tom seized him by the shoulder and shook him roughly. The man roused up a little.

"Pull your leg when I lift!" Tom shouted, and then he stooped down and got hold of the edge of the wheel.

He straightened his back, bent his knees and gripped the wheel tight; then with a great effort he flung back his head and straightened his knees. Up came the cart, wheel, frame and all.

"Pull your leg out!" Tom shouted again. The man started, tried to sit up, pulled his leg a little way out, gave up and rolled over on his face with his head directly under the wheel.

It was too much. Tom thought he would rather have died than see such a thing happen. He could not hold up such a load for more than a few moments, and it would kill the man when it fell. No one was in sight. He could not move, not a muscle, or he would have to let go. Oh, if he had only let the fellow lie there and brought help.

"Get out of there! Rouse up!" he cried; and then, as the man did not move: "Help! help!" he yelled. "There's a man dying! Help!"

There was only one house near enough to send him aid in time, and he directed his cries at that. There were lights in the windows, but no one seemed to stir to help him. At last the strain became so great that he could shout no longer. He clenched his teeth and resigned himself to despair.

A door slammed. He looked up at the house and saw a girl running down the steps. Could he hold out till she got to him? "I'll make a good bluff at it, anyway," thought Tom, grimly, and he held on. He had not strength enough even to hurry up his rescuer.

The girl, who was well built, strong and ruddy, reached his side quickly.

"What are you wanting, sorr?" she said.

Tom was gasping. Great drops of sweat ran down his face. His feet staggered about from place to place.

"ROUSE UP!" HE CRIED.

His legs were strained past bearing; his hands perfectly numb. He felt that he was all but done for.

"Pull out the man!" he muttered, and then shut his lips tight as the wheel almost slipped from his grasp.

"Don't go under!" Tom gasped, in agony. "I may drop it!"

"Faith, then, you won't!" came her voice, without a tremor. "You'll hold on a bit longer. You won't let it hurt me!"

That was enough for Tom. He bent his knees a trifle, renewed his grip on the wheel, leaned his head forward a little, and then a "Ready! Heave!" burst out on the night air that made the street ring.

Back flew his head again, his great knees straightened themselves, and once more wheel, frame and wagon shot up in the air. A moment later the girl had pulled the coal man out of danger.

Tom thanked the girl as best he could, and then, utterly at the end of his strength, sank right down where he was in the mud and dirt. It seemed as if he could never move again.

"Sure 'twas an iligant pull entirely!" said the Irish girl, admiringly. "What shall I be doin' now?"

"Run for the doctor," Tom said, rousing himself; or no! I don't think it will be necessary."

A car was coming, this one out from town. It was crowded. With great effort Tom stood on his feet and ran to the track. "Stop, stop!" he cried. "Some one's hurt!"

The motor man stopped. Tom climbed on board, and slammed open the front door. "Is there a doctor here?" he inquired. A middle-aged man rose from his seat and came toward the front of the car. Tom led the way to the coal cart. "The team fell on him and hurt his leg," he said.

The doctor stooped down and began to make his examination. A crowd from the car gathered about the spot.

The girl's father was one of the number, and he eagerly questioned his daughter about what had happened. She told him what she knew, and all who heard her turned eagerly to get a sight of the young fellow who had borne so much to save the injured man's life.

But Tom was no longer to be seen. He liked to do his duty, but he hated to talk about it. He was on his way home, and hard enough it was for him to get there.

The next morning at breakfast Mr. Gordon read from the newspaper a very ornamental but substantially correct account of the strength and bravery of an unknown young man who had preserved Michael Daly, of Woodhouse's Coal company, from instant death. Mr. Gordon read well, and his wife and daughters could hardly breathe till he had finished.

"O-o-oh!" cried Gertrude, when the end came. "What a splendid man! And so modest, too, not letting anyone know who he was! He was a real hero, wasn't he, Tom?"

"Why, no," said Tom, unconcernedly. "I can't say I see anything especially heroic about it."

"Well!" Gertrude exclaimed, turning to her mother, "Tom is the most unromantic boy! I don't believe he knows what a hero is!"—Youth's Companion.

Stolen.

Rev. James J. Woods, of the St. Paul Cathedral, mourns the loss of a valuable gold chalice, which was stolen from the sacristy of the church. The vessel, which was pure gold, was presented to Father Woods on the first anniversary of the day of his ordination by his first convert. It was therefore double dear to him.

In speaking of it Father Woods said that if he had remembered correctly not over half a dozen were present when I began saying mass. He was engaged 30 minutes in his devotions. When he finished using the chalice he carefully wiped and dried it, and returned it to the case, which stood in the sacristy. Before returning to the altar to make his thanksgiving Father Woods turned the key to the case. He did not, however, remove the key from the lock.

To Be Drained.

A project is now on foot to drain the great Morrel swamp, through a portion of which the Missabe road passes, by a syndicate now being formed to carry out the plans. It is expected that upwards to 10,000 acres of waste land will be converted into rich productive farming lands. It will be cultivated at first for grass. The St. Louis and Whiteface rivers are close by and the swamp, now covered with a growth of dead spruce and tamarac, can be easily drained. There are several other swamps and muskegs in the same vicinity that will be drained and made into farms if this experiment succeeds.

Drunken Indians.

There has just occurred one of the most disgraceful scenes in the history of Tower. The day previous the United States Indian agent had distributed an annuity of $9.89 to each Indian on the reserve, a few miles away from Sucker Point. The agent had no sooner left town on his way to pay off the Indians at Nett lake than those there flocked to town and began celebrating. All were anxious to get rid of their money as fast as possible. Many purchased such luxuries as perfumes, silk handkerchiefs, candy, etc., but the majority preferred to get drunk.

Red Lake Reservation.

The surveys recently made in the vicinity of Red lake are being examined by government land office engineers, headed by Col. T. R. Hinsdale, of Washington, D. C. He said with reference to the report that the Red lake reservation may be opened this fall, that there is a strong movement in that direction, but he thinks it will take nearly a year to complete the details which are considered necessary before opening this vast and very valuable domain to settlement.

News in Brief.

The Northern Pacific road has arranged to extend the Keystone spur, which connects with the Red Lake Falls line, north through the towns of Tabor and Farley into Marshall county.

During the week ending Sept. 29th, 1894, The A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company of Minneapolis published an item in its list to the effect that A. G. Highton of Buffalo, had been arrested in St. Paul for passing bogus checks. It appears that the item was an unjust reflection upon Mr. Highton and an injury. Therefore the Kellogg Company makes full retraction of the same.

During the height of a northwest storm Jack Young and Scarface Kelly, local dockmen, undertook to swim across the ship canal at Duluth. When they had gotten out a short distance it was seen that neither could swim, being too much under the influence of liquor. A passing tug picked them up just in time. The storm was the worst of the season.

The Commercial house at Waterville, owned by H. G. Schultz, was struck by lightning and two persons were severely shocked, but no one fatally.

The body of an unknown man was found in Roberts lake near Faribault.

WORDS OF PRAISE.

President Cleveland Has Them for Gen. Schofield.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—The following order, announcing officially to the army the retirement from active service of Lieut. Gen. John M. Schofield, was published Monday:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Sept. 30, 1895.—Lieut. Gen. John M. Schofield has reached the age entitling him to relief from active military service. He is, in accordance with the provisions of law, hereby placed upon the retired list of the army to date September 29, 1895, with all the pay and allowances belonging to his rank upon such retirement.

"It is with much regret that the president makes the announcement that the country is thus to lose from the command of its army this distinguished general who has done so much for its honor and efficiency. His gallantry in war challenges the admiration of all his countrymen, while they will not fail to gratefully remember and appreciate how faithfully he has served his country in times of peace by his splendid and successful performance of civil as well as military duty.

"Lieut. Gen. Schofield's career, exhibiting an unvarying love for his profession, a zealous care for its honor and good name, a just apprehension of the subordination it exacts and a constant manifestation of the best traits of true Americanism, furnishes to the army an example of inestimable value and should teach all our people that the highest soldierly qualities are built upon the keenest sense of the obligations belonging to good citizenship.

"(Signed) GROVER CLEVELAND."

Gen. Miles, now in the command of the department of the east, will succeed Gen. Schofield as commander of the army. When he will be detached from the deparment of the east and ordered to Washington cannot yet be stated. Until the order bringing him to Washington is issued, orders to the army from army headquarters will be by order of the secretary of war.

A SPLIT IN THE PARTY.

Fairchild Democrats in New York Leave the State Convention.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 27.—In a scene of confusion and wild excitement, followed by the cheers of the Cleveland men in the democratic state convention and the hoots and jeers of the Tammanyites, Charles S. Fairchild and his followers, of the New York state democracy, left the convention Wednesday morning on the adoption of the report of the committee on credentials. The anti-Tammany democrats of New York city considered a fifth of a loaf worse than no bread at all. The proposition to give one-fifth of a vote to each of their delegates, giving four-fifths to Tammany, was rejected by them, though indorsed by the convention. A final struggle was made by the Cleveland men in a motion to allow them one-third representation, or thirty-five votes to seventy for Tammany. This was voted down and they left the hall, taking their one-fifth representation with them.

The platform as adopted declares for home rule; economy in public expenses; honesty in public office; equal and honest enforcement of all the laws; equal taxation; individual liberty; honest elections; practical and honest reform in the civil service; intelligent and liberal promotion of agriculture; beneficial and needed legislation in the interests of labor; federal taxation for revenue only; sound money, gold and silver the only legal tender; strict construction of the federal constitution; no entangling alliances with foreign nations; vigorous enforcement of the Monroe doctrine; reaffirms the democratic national platform of 1892, and invites attention to the humiliating record made by the republican party.

After the adoption of the platform the following ticket was named.

For secretary of state, Horatio C. King, of Kings.

For attorney general, Horton B. Chase, of Albany.

For state treasurer, Dewitt Clinton Dow, of Schoharie.

For comptroller, John B. Judson, of Fulton.

For state engineer, Russell R. Stuart, of Onondaga.

NIPPED BY FROST.

Late Corn and Tobacco Crops Ruined—Vegetation Entirely Destroyed.

MIDDLESBORO, Ky., Oct. 2.—There was a heavy frost Monday morning. Late corn and tobacco are ruined. The financial loss is heavy. Farmers from Bean's Fork report ice a quarter of an inch thick. Vegetation is entirely destroyed.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Oct. 2.—This section was visited by the first material frost of the season Monday morning. Late market garden stuff was nipped, but the damage is only nominal.

STERLING, Kan., Oct. 2.—There was a heavy frost here Sunday night and ice formed to a thickness of an eighth of an inch. This will injure the broom corn brush yet to be pulled.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 2.—Central Kentucky experienced a killing frost Sunday night, almost entirely ruining the tobacco crop now in the field. Sorghum and other green vegetation was damaged likewise.

The Gold Reserve.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—The treasury gold reserve has been reduced to $92,705,067, at which figures it stood when the treasury closed its doors on Friday. These figures were reached by a withdrawal at New York for export of $1,500,000.

Government officials are encouraged to believe that within a month the number of commercial bills that will be on the market as a result of the export of American cereals and cotton, will turn the tide of exchange and stop gold exports for some time to come.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Lobster Salad (Indian style): String the lobster very fine and mix it with lettuce and dandelion, sprinkled with vinegar, oil and fine herbs.—Leeds Mercury.

—Chicken Consomme: Boil a fowl, including the head and feet, nicely scalded and cleaned; add to the liquor a blade of mace and an onion; boil briskly till the meat separates from the bones, strain off and place on the ice to cool.—Harpers' Bazar.

—Furred Kettles: Water of every kind, except rain-water, will speedily cover the inside of a teakettle with a unpleasant crust. This may be easily guarded against by placing a clean oyster-shell in the kettle, which will always keep it in good order by attracting the particles of earth or stone.—Housekeeper.

—Scalloped Eggs: Have some ham or tongue chopped very fine; add to it a few bread crumbs, pepper, chopped parsley and some melted butter. Moisten with milk to make it a soft paste, and half fill some patty pans or scallop shells with the mixture. Break an egg carefully on each, and put a pinch of salt on them and sprinkle cracker dust over this. Place the shells in a pan and put in a moderate oven and bake until the white is set.—Boston Budget.

—Chipped Pears: Take pears not quite ripe, pare and core, and cut them into long thin strips. To eight pounds of the fruit put eight pounds of sugar, the rind of four lemons cut into strips, the juice of the lemons, one-fourth pound of mace or green ginger, and half a pint of water. Boil until the fruit is transparent if held to the light. The ginger must first be scraped thoroughly and cut fine, and the lemon peel should be boiled in water until tender to remove the bitter taste. Or you may use only thin shavings of the outer rind.—Farmer's Review.

—Crab Apple Preserves: Take the apples when very ripe, wash and drain without removing the stems. Place in preserving kettle with just enough water to cover. Simmer slowly till the skin peels off easily, then drain, peel and core the apples without breaking the apples or removing the stems. Next weigh them, and allow one and one-fourth pounds sugar and one-half pint water to each pound of crab apples. Put sugar and water into kettle, and when sugar is dissolved bring to boiling point quickly and skim. Put in the crab apples and simmer till clear and tender, skimming the scum from the top. Put away in jars or tumblers to cool, and seal up the same as jelly.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Pickled Onions and Cauliflower: These pickles may be made together or separately. Select small white onions of an even size and peel them. Cut the cauliflower into pieces to correspond in size with the onions if used together. Place in a steamer and steam till they may be pierced with a fork. Heat a quantity of white vinegar in a granite or porcelain-lined kettle, adding enough white sugar to make it taste slightly sweet. Place the vegetables when steamed in self-sealing, glass cans and drop in each can a few cloves and some small pieces of cinnamon bark, and if you have it a small red pepper pod. Fill the cans with boiling vinegar and fasten while hot. They will be ready for use when cool.—Western Rural

Jaunty Jacket Suits.

Three styles of jacket suits will be worn in the fall, with the skirt having a godet effect with a stiff interling twelve inches deep. The Eton fronts may come to the waist-line or point below for two inches; one back comes to the waist-line with two box-plaits and a fitted belt, the latter passing under the fronts and through the side seams. The backs have a center seam, and the second style has an umbrella back of three inserted gores forming a basque six inches below the waist, with two buttons at the waist-line and three on either side of the front; rolling collar and wide revers and very large leg-of-mutton sleeves. A silk or woolen plaid waist or loose front and crush collar is worn, or a regular shirtwaist of plain or plaid serge, Henrietta, crepon and other woolen fabrics. The short blazer jacket has a similar collar, revers, sleeves and button trimmings; is slightly full at the back, only six inches below the waist-line, and has a tiny strap across the front holding the fronts together. Mixed cheviot, tweed, mohair of a heavy quality, serge and homespun mixtures will all figure in such suits in place of cotton duck and pique.—Ladies' Home Journal.

An Autumn Gown.

A stylish gown for the autumn is made of golden-brown English mohair, with a goard and plaited skirt five yards wide around the hem, full mutton-leg sleeves draped slightly on the outside of the arm, and a round waist a little pointed front and back. Three simulated box-plaits, narrowing as they near the waist line, are lined with crinoline, and edged with very narrow bronze and gold bead gimp. Loops of velvet trim the shoulders, and the same material forms the soft belt and folded stock collar. Large bronze and gold buttons are placed on the upper half of the box-plaits, and a clasp to match fastens the girdle. The waist is hooked in the back under the velvet plait. A very small shoulder-cape of brown velvet, very full at the edge, is lined with gold and brown shot taffeta, and the long cape is edged with Vandyke points of bronze and gold bead passementerie. The skirt is untrimmed.—N. Y. Post.

Scorched Cloth.

What to do with scorched places on cloth is a question that sometimes puzzles the careful housewife. If the scorch is not too bad, dipping the article in soapsuds and hanging it in the sun for some hours will be likely to remove it. If the day is dull hang the piece before a grate fire. Scorched spots that are very bad, and yet have not consumed the fibre of the goods, are said to be restorable by repeated dipping in a saturated solution of borax. The saturated solution, as the chemists call it, consists of as much salt or crystal as the water will dissolve. It is always safe to put in a little extra; if the borax stands undisturbed in the bottom of the bottle, one is sure of the full-strength solution. Repeated dipping of this, with exposure to sun or fire light, will remove what are by most housekeepers considered hopeless discolorations.—Boston Budget.

WEATHER AT HIGH ALTITUDES.

Signal Station Work on Mountains in America and Europe.

In a paper recently read before the Boston Scientific society, Mr. Rotch, of the Blue Hill observatory, makes some statements about high-altitude stations for meteorological observation. The first summit station in the world was that established in 1870 upon Mt. Washington, at an elevation of 6,820 feet. Some remarkable observations have been made there, such, for instance, as a temperature of 50 degrees below zero, during the progress of a gale blowing at 184 miles an hour. The station on Pike's Peak, 14,134 feet high, has been closed, and there are now but two summit stations in the United States where observations are made regularly, viz., at the Lick observatory and at Blue Hill, near Boston. The highest meterological station in the world is that maintained by Harvard College observatory in Peru, at the summit of El Misti, 19,300 feet. It is visited several times a month by one of the staff of the Harvard observatory below, at Arequipa, who attends to its self-registering instruments, checks the readings, and so forth. A splendid chain of high-altitude stations exists in France, including those on Mount Ventoux, 6,250 feet, and the Pic du Midi, 9,440 feet. The highest of the stations established by M. Vallot on or near Mount Blanc is at the Rochels des Bosses, 14,320 feet, which is provided with self-recording instruments capable of running two weeks without attention, and is in use during the summer. The Mount Blanc observatory of M. Janssen is not yet in operation; it has an altitude of 15,780 feet. The highest permanent observatory now in use in Europe is the Sonnblick station, 10,170 feet, in the Austrian Alps, which has given valuable results. Switzerland and Italy have well-located and equipped mountain stations; and the one on Ben Nevis, in England, though not so high, has given a ten years' unbroken series of hourly observations. Of course, it is possible to send self-recording instruments up in balloons to a much greater height than a person could reach and be able to breathe. An altitude of ten miles and over has been reached by this means in France, and last July in Germany, with very valuable results. Kites also have carried anemometers to considerable heights with good results. Dr. Berson last year reached an altitude of 30,000 feet for nearly six miles, making from this balloon some very significant observations upon temperature and humidity, winds and clouds, in a seldom visited region. He is said to have suffered little from the diminishing pressure of the atmosphere at this great height, peobably because of his inhalation of oxygen from time to time.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

When Marking Linen.

The approved spot for marking sheets and pillow-cases that have the monogram or initials embroidered on them is in the center of the top hem for the sheet, or just below it on the crease or middle fold. The bottom of the letter should be toward the edge of the hem, so that it will come right when the hem of the sheet is turned over on the counterpane. Pillow-cases are also marked in the center of the hem. Often such linen as well as table linen has in addition the family crest, the same design in different sizes being used through different sets or the same set. The size of the design depends somewhat on the size of the piece marked. In embroidering crests and coats of arms the lines are done in laid-stitch, the device in French knots, and the background in seed-stitch. Tablecloths usually have two markings in opposite corners, placed so far in that the design will come on the surface of the table when the cloth is laid. Sometimes the markings are placed on the middle lengthwise crease of the cloth, a little over ten inches from the center, so that they will not come under the centerpiece when one is used. They, too, must be so placed that the bottom of the letter points toward the end of the table. Dinner napkins have the marking in the center of the square formed by folding them twice each way.—St. Louis Republic.

Where Men Are Weak.

A woman who has to work for a living has no time to work the men and the men are such chumps that they have to be worked to be secured. A girl who neglects her work to curl her hair and bat her eyes at the men stands a better chance of winning a husband than the girl who makes her daily work her first object. This is not complimentary to the men, but men are great chumps, and everyday occurrences prove that they are particularly chumpy so far as the women are concerned.—Atchison Globe.

SHE sat before me at the play,
She was a beauty quite;
The house was full, the air was cool,
The play was out of sight.

Are You Satisfied?

If you are, no matter how well you think you have been doing, you are about ready to be an angel. Man, by the very essence of his nature, is never satisfied—always wants more, or something different. The theologians draw from this characteristic an argument for immortality. May be so—but we are not now talking theology. The harvest is over for the farmer, the summer sales ended for the business man. If you have made some money, you may wish to make an investment elsewhere. To do so, take a journey to whatever part of the country you think offers opportunities. The farmer will find new lands in the Dakotas, Nebraska and Wyoming, good to hold for a rise, or to make a new and larger farm; the investor can find many chances in ranching and mining in Colorado, Montana and Wyoming; the pine forests and iron mines of Minnesota offer good returns for investment; the prairies of Illinois and Iowa are attractive to the agriculturist seeking a fertile soil and moderate climate; Missouri calls to the fruit raiser, the farmer and the miner alike—and Wisconsin is an all-round good state. To visit and travel over any of these, reaching easily all its principal cities and towns, you will do best by purchasing your railroad tickets over the Burlington Route, any agent of which will cheerfully give all needed information, or you can address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

DENVER, Sept. 10.—My journey from Chicago was over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, one of the best managed systems in the country, I should say judging by the civility of the employes, the comfort I experienced, the excellence of it, roadbed, and the punctuality of arrival. I actually reached Denver ahead of time. The Burlington Route is also the best to St. Paul, Minneapolis, Omaha and Kansas City.

If you have borrowed from health to satisfy the demands of business, if your blood is not getting that constant supply of fat from your food it should have, you must pay back from somewhere, and the somewhere will be from the fat stored up in the body.

What do Children Think?

I wonder what women suppose their children think when they hear them tell a lie?

It is a continual street car experience to hear arguments between conductors and parents as to the ages of of children.

"I'll have to get a fare for that one," says the guardian of the indicator.

"I never pay for her," replies the parent heartily.

"Well, I'll have to ring up 5 cents for her; she's over age."

"Why, what do you mean? They never charge me on any other line," is the response.

"Ain't that child over four?" asks ringerup.

It is obvious to any one with half an eye that the object of discussion is fully six, and not small for that. The mother has avoided making the statement, but when questioned point blank she says:

"No, she ain't; she is only three and a half."

And I wonder how she can look the child in the face.—New York Recorder.

A Family Row.

How is this for our boasted peaceful times:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., OCT. 2.—Mrs. Gustave Pabst, formerly Margaret Mather, the actress, created a sensation near their home, at Twenty-ninth and Cedar streets, this afternoon, by striking her husband, a son of the wealthy brewer, several times with a horse whip. What was the cause of of the trouble no one seems to know, but numerous residents in the vicinity were eye witnesses to the altercation, which began in a buggy in which the couple were riding and which ended at the cornor of Twenty-fourth and State streets, where Mr. Pabst wrenched the whip from his wife's hands as the latter struck her husband a blow full in the face.

Mr. and Mrs. Pabst were driving along Twenty-seventh street about noon, when suddenly, just as they were about to turn onto Cedar street toward their home, Mrs. Papst grabbed the whip from the socket and doubling it struck Mr. Pabst full in the face.

Mr. Pabst jumped out of the buggy and started down the sreet. The woman drove the horse to a post, hitched it and followed her husband, overtaking him a block away, where she struck him four times in the face. Young Pabst then wrenched the whip from her hand and threw it away. But the one-sided battle was by no means at an end, for she then clenched her fist and and planted a blow from the sholder square on his nose. Then Mr. Pabst moved at a rapid pace, the woman following, both entered there home togather on Cedar street. The affair taok place in a fashionable part of the city, and was witnessed by a large number of people.—Minneapolis Times.

Shouldered a New Obligation.

SHE: "Have you seen that mannish Miss Strider in bloomers?"

HE: "No."

SHE: "It's awful—she raises her hat now when she meets women in skirts."

Deviding a Baby.

A country newspaper reports a brief colloquy between a woman and her lazy husband. She was busy, and the baby was crying, and the man, so far as appears, was doing nothing. "John", she said, "I wish you would rock the baby." "O bother" was the answer "why should I rock the baby?" "Why, because he isn't very well, and I have this mending to do, besides half of him belongs to you, any how, and you ought to be willing to take care of him." "Well, half of him belongs to you, too, and you can rock your half and let my half holler.—Philidelphia Press.

What It Raised.

The following story reminds us of some farms near here.

"A farmer living in New Hampshire was visited by a friend of his boyhood who had a fine wheat farm in California. The visitor eyed the scanty products of his friends farm in dismay almost fearing his visit of a few days would eat up the whole profits of the year. Finally he demanded sternly.

"Jim, do you call this seven-by-nine patch of stones, a farm?"

"Y-e-a-s, Thars my turnips!"

"Turnips! They aint enough turnips thar ter feed a dvin' tam'; an' what's in that patch over thar?"

"Pa'snips."

"Hump! pa'snips! an' this?

"Potatus."(laconically)

"Neow Jim, I'd just like ter have you tell me what your farm can raise!"

"You want to know?"

"Yes."(fervently).

"Wa-e-el jist this: It kin raise the biggest lot of dust on a windy day of any farm of ten times its size. 'Side from that, 'tint worth much for produce!"—Youths Companion.

Yes She had a Beau.

"Is any one waiting on you" asked a polite flour walker of a timid maiden from Port Chester, in a Harlem dry-goods emporium recently.

"Yes Sir," replied the awkward damsel, pointing to the door indicating a still more bashful youth, "That's him. He's keeping company with me but he's afraid to come in."—Epworth Herald.

I wish I was an Injun.

A six year-old boy wrote his first composition on water. "Water is good to drink, to bathe in and to skate on. When I was a little baby the nurse used to bathe me every morning in water. I have been told that the Injuns don't wash themselves once in ten years. I wish I was an Injun!"

MINNESOTA.

MISS HARRIET F. GARVIN.

(Tune, Zion.)

Thou art decked in regal splendor
As a bride in fair array:
For thy gems, lo! lakes are gleaming,
For thy robes the wheat fields sway.
Minnesota,
State where thousand waters play!

From thy breast the Mississippi
Rolls its jeweled tide along;
At thine ear sweet Minnehaha
Sings her never-changing song,
Land of Waters!
State we let the suffer wrong?

Shall thy sons defile thy fairness?
Soil thy crystal purity?
To a curse turn gifts God given,
Pearls to tears of misery?
Bane or blessing
Shall thy beauty be to thee?

God of love! withhold thy judgments,
Thine we are, our work is thine;
Thine our country, it's salvation
Resteth on thy heart divine.
Bless thy handmaids
Fighting Want and Woe and Wine!

WILLIAM MAHONE Ex-Senator from Virginia and a Major General in the Confederate army died, on the 8th inst.

W. H. EUSTIS is said to have formally announced, at Duluth, a few days since that "I shall be a candidate for the nomination for governor in 1896"

FROM a communication in the Daily Globe it appears that Minnesota now has one school, at least, that furnishes not only free text books but clothing to its scholars.

THE Ninth Christian Endeavor convention of Minnesota will be held at Duluth on the 18th 19th and 20th of October. 500 delegates are expected and arrangements have been made to entertain visitors in good style.

WHILE prize fights have been excluded from Texas, Chicago still permits the playing of foot ball. From all accounts the latter is the most disastrous to the greatest number. Foot ball rules should be such that sluggers will be forever barred from the game.

GOV. CLOUGH evidently knew what he was about when he failed to make connections with the editorial excursion to Atlanta. He is still visiting fairs and catching the Wee's at home, singly, and individually, where he can get better acquainted than in a crowd like that which took the Georgia trip.

THE biggest kind of an effort is being made to unite the West and the South for political supremacy. Republicans are advocating the nomination of C. K. Davis, of Minnesota, and H. Clay Evans, of Tennessee, for President and Vice President. Of course the democrats will make a similar combination. How would Senator Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana, and Ex. Gov. Bob Taylor, of Tennessee, do?

Our Visit to the Sunny South.

For nearly six years have we sat in the editoral chair of the GAZETTE, without a vacation of more than a few days at a time, and so considered ourself entitled to a trip with the Minnesota Editoral Association to the Sunny South. We went, and we enjoyed the trip immensely. About 100 [illegible] including some [illegible] 20 ladies made up the party. It was a fine assembly of people, In for a good time. We kept along with the crowd and saw many things of interest. Saturday we spent in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and arrived at Chicago, Sunday morning, looked over Lincoln Park; rode on the Metropolitan Elevated railroad, and saw many things of interest. Monday morning found us at Nashville where we were met by a delegation of Tennessee Editors and escorted to the Vanderbuilt University, A credit to the founders of that place of learning. Afterwards to the Fisk University for colored people, where we were treated to singing by the quartette of the scholars, which was voted as fine as the finest. We visited the capital, one of the grandest old buildings we saw on the trip. Old Hickory Jackson's Statue on horseback sets on the grounds near the front entrance, President Polk's Monument, as nearly like the old as possible is near by, his remains with those of his wife having lately been removed to their final resting place. In the Legislative hall a large portrait, standing, of Gen. Jackson hangs opposite the speakers desk where his eye ever rests on the proceedings taking place there. We then went to the noted Belle Mead Stock Farm, the home of General W. H. Jackson a brother of the late Judge Howell Jackson. Here we found a typical southern home, of the anti-bellum days, and its owner took evident pleasure in exhibiting his belongings. The finest horses we ever saw; 100 suckling coalts for sale. His dairy business beats even the state fair. He has 190 Milk cows of the Jersy and Short Horn breeds, and his barns are as clean as many houses. His darkies chased by for our inspection his herd of 350 deer. We then looked through his well furnished house, and returned to the Centeunial grounds which were dedicated in a neat speech by W. L. Hunt of our party. In the evening complementary tickets having been distributed to the party all went to the Grand Auditorium where they enjoyed, in an audience of about five thousand people, interesting letcures by the noted Taylor Brothers "Alf" and "Bob" the war of the roses, or "Yankee Doodle" and "Dixie." The next morning found us at Chattanooga, where the party took teams for the National Cemetery, Orchard Knob, Missionary Ridge, thence down to the Chicamauga battle fields. Snodgrass Hill where stands among many others, the beautiful monument to the Minnesota 2nd Inf. Vol. after looking over the National Park, we returned to Chattanooga where the electric cars carried us to the foot of Look Out Mountain where an incline took thirty at a time to near the top of the mountain where they waited until all were up and boarded a narrow guage train for Look Out Inn this last ride around the top of the mountain was highly interesting, and will be remembered about as long as any other part of the trip. Wednesday morning found us in Atlanta. It is a large place and quite modern. The Cotton Exposition was visited for most of the time for two days. Things were not all in place yet, but when they are there will be a grand exhibit. The grounds are well laid out buildings neat and substantial, and the exhibits excellent.

The weather during the entire trip was fine and a more enjoyable time, perhaps, never was had by so large a company for the same length of time.

Editorial Excursion to the Sunny South.—Incidents.

J. H. Manchester shot the chute.

David Ramaley took two medals "I have Shot the Chutes at Atlanta."

M. J. Dowling and Miss Jennie Bordewick entered the state of matrimony at Atlanta.

J. E. Childs came home without his basket of relics.

Most of the editors shook hands with the Governor of Tennessee.

Our guest, C. J. Monfort, of the Windsor Hotel, St. Paul, had as fine a time as any body on the trip.

Gov. Clough failed to make connection with the excursion train.

Some of the editors don't like football after witnessing it in Chicago.

One of the party broke the arm off of his chair cheering the singing of the Fisk University quartette.

Partic'pants in the excursion were brought very near together.

The ride on the narrow guage railroad around the top of Look Out Mountain was very impressive, and will long be remembered.

The greatest degree of satisfaction was manifested while partaking of the sweet potatoes and baked apples, at Chattanooga, on the way home.

"Yankee Doodle" and "Dixie" was a treat enjoyed by all.

Mrs. George Lamphere came near being hurt by a stone hurled through the window of the sleeper while coming through Kentucky.

The officers and committee attended strictly to business in looking after the interests of excursionists.

The Maple Leaf Route, Great Western, Eastern Illinois, Terra Haute and Evansville, Evansville and Nashville, Nashville and Chattanooga and Atlanta railroads rushed the editors along over their tracks on time.

All agree in pronouncing this the most instructive and enjoyable trip they ever had.

Late Literary News.

Rudyard Kipling makes his 1st appearance as a teller of Jungle Stories in The Cosmopolitan for October.

"Mowgli Leaves the Jungle Forever," and the curtain is drawn over one of the most charming conceits in literature. In the same number in which Mowgli makes his final adieux, appears for the first time before an American audience, the nowfamed Richard Le Gallienne in a plea for religion under the title of "The Griatness of Man." A very important paper on "State Universities" is contributed to this number by Professor Ely. And among the story-tellers are Honkinson Smith and Boyesen. No more beautiful work has ever appeared in any magazine than the marvelous illustrations of Cabrinety used as a frontispiece and accompanying the prose poem by Mrs Cardozo. Drake—who is said to de Kipling's favorite artist for his Jungle Stories—Carter Beard, Osterland, Denman, and Kemble, are among those who contribute a wealth of illustration to this number. The Cosmopolitan announces that it will begin the publication in January of THE AGRICULTURIST'S ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, to be fully the equal of THE COSMOPOLITAN, but containing from sixteen to twenty pages by the ablest agricultural writers of the world, upon subjects of importance to the agricultural, horticulturist, and stock growing interests.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Oct. 4, 1895

"Lots of senseless twaddle is being indulged in about Cuba, by men who ought to know better," remarked a gentlemen prominently connected with the administration. "One might suppose from the contents of the newspapers that it was a mearly a question of sympathy as to the position maintained by the administration. As a mater of fact sympathy is not a factor. The government is controlled by international law and prudence, for this government to recognize the government which the Cuban revolutionists have established on paper, but which has yet neither location or habitation, would be equivalent to declaring war against Spain for the purpose of aiding Cuba to gain its independence, or to open our Treasury to the demands for indemnity which Spain could and would make upon us if we keep our hands off and the revolt was put down. If we assumed the right to openly assist Cuba we should probably find ourselves involved in war with more powerful opponents than Spain. When Cuba sets up and maintaines an independent government, as did the Central American colonies of Spain, at the time the famous Monroe doctrine was promulgated, will be time enough for this government to recognize her independence. It is simply nonsense to talk of recognizing what does not exist, just because we sympathize with what is sought to be established. Governments cannot be run on that bases. England had much better grounds for recognizing the belligerency of the Suthern Confederacy, which had armies, a navy and an established government, and yet an international court of arbitration made England pay dearly for that recognition, in the hard cash that went to pay the Alabama claims. Had the Suthern Confederacy succeeded those claims would not have had to be paid"

Hon. D. I. Murphy, Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, whose taking part in the Maryland campaign has knocked the last plank from the bottom of the silly lie about President Cleveland not wishing the democrat party to carry that state this year, takes a very sensible view of that campaign. After expressing the opinion that the state would go democratic, Mr Murphy said: "I cannot understand how the disaffected democrats can reconcile themselves to the position they have taken. They seem to think that if they let the republicans win this year they can oust them next year. They cannot do anything of the kind. A republican victory this fall means that the government will be in the hands of that party for years. If the regular democracy is defeated this year does any one believe that next year the tail will wag the dog and the regulars, who are in a large majority, will go to work to help the bolters? It is hardly common sense to relv on such a situation. No, sir; the democrats if they want to control Maryland, must not let it go out of their grasp this year."

The attemid to start a Lincoln boom, by giving it out that ex-President Harrison was in favor of the nomination of ex-Secretary Lincoln fell very flat in Washington. Mr. Lincoln is too well known here. His abilities were thoroughly sized up when he was Secretary of War, and the verdict was unanimous that it was away below the Presidential grade. "Had Bob Lincoln been a man of one-tenth of the ability of his father, insted of the well-dressed, well-fed, nonentity he is," said a republican who has helped to make and unmake candidates for his party for more than a generation, "his name would long ago have made him the Presidental candidate of his party."

Senator Blackburn came to Washington to attend the marriage of his daughter, Miss Lucille, to Mr. Thomas F Lane, of N. J., which occurred Tuesday, but he returned to Kentucky the same night to resume his campaign. He said the democrats were going to elect the state ticket and the legislature, and that his return to the Senate was assured.

Secretary Carlisle told Ex Representative Wilkerson of La., now Collector of Customs at New Orleans, who called to see him in behalf of the sugar planters, that he could do nothing except to expedite a hearing of their claims for bounty by the Court of Claims, in accordance with the decision of the Comptroller, which he had no power to overrule. For some reason none of the claimants want to get before the Court of Claims. While nobody seemg to know just what will be done, it is probable that nothing will be done until after Congress meets and it shall have been ascertained whether Congress will act.

LATEST NEWS.

This mornings papers contain a rumor that President Cleveland was assassinated at his home at Gray Gables, near Buzzard's Bay. Communication appears to be cut off. But as a woman was murdered in that vicinity and in chasing the murderer the officers ran near the President's home it is thought the report got started that the victim was President Cleveland.

This Is Enterprise. Northwest Still Leads.

The publishers of the ST. PAUL WEEKLY DISPATCH have just favored us with a copy of their annual premium supplement. Some of the offers which they make are simply wonderful. Articles which usually cost more than the subscription price of the paper are given free with a years subscription. There is something of interest in it for every member of every family.

It is hard to understand how they can afford to make such offers. The subscription price of the WEEKLY DISPATCH is 75 cents per annum, and the paper is the largest weekly published in Minnesota, consisting of from ten to sixteen pages a week.

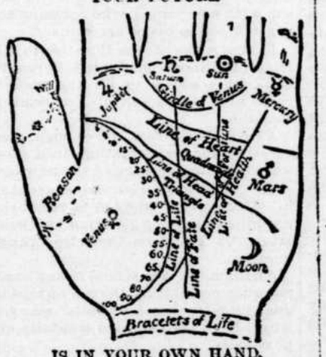
YOUR FUTURE



IS IN YOUR OWN HAND.

Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power; clear LINE OF FORTUNE, fame or riches. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEART bespeaks tenderness; a straight LINE OF FATE, peaceful life; the reverse if crooked. A well defined LINE OF HEALTH spares you doctors' bills; so will the health hints in Demorest's. No other magazine publishes so many stories to interest the home circle. You will be subject to extremes of high spirits or despondency if you have the GIRDLE OF VENUS well marked; keep up your spirits by having Demorest's Magazine to read. By subscribing to it for 1896 you will receive a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides the superb premium picture, 17x22 inches, "I'm a Daisy!" which is almost a real baby, and equal to the original oil painting which cost $300; and you will have a magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep you posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads, and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and you get with it, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2.00, and you will really get over $25.00 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send for a specimen copy. A large QUADRANGLE means honesty; a large TRIANGLE, generosity; long FIRST DIVISION OF THUMB, strong will; LONG SECOND DIVISION, reasoning faculty. The MOUNT OF JUPITER betokens ambition; that of SATURN, prudence; the SUN, love of splendor; MARS, courage; MOON, imagination; VENUS, love of pleasure; and MERCURY, intelligence. Take our advice as above and you will be sure to possess the last and most valuable quality.

In a certain town in Indiana a man by the name of Creese horrified the populace by allowing a snake to crawl out of his trousers as he boarded a train at the depot. A man with both a Creese and a snake in his trousers is too swell for most any state.

Lieut. Peary says that he never will see the north pole unless it is brought to the United States. This is his way of announcing that he is done with excursions in search of the tip of the earth, feeling too old for labors of that kind. Probably failure to catch a glimpse of the pole will not worry him much. Millions of people are in the same predicament, and are not lying awake nights over it.

South Carolina occupies the unique position among the states of the union of being the only one which has no divorce law, and has never had. And now the constitutional convention, in session at Columbia, after a hard fight, by a vote of 86 to 49, adopted a section of the constitution forbidding the granting of divorces for any cause whatever, and not allowing recognition of divorces granted in other states.

Joseph Bell, the engineer on Stephenson's first steam engine, the Sproket, died recently in London at the age of 85. He was all his life a railroad engineer, and had seen every change made in these motors of travel and civilization. The progress which has been made is summed up in a single lifetime. Had Joseph Bell survived a few years longer he might possibly have seen steam displaced by electricity.

The cow which gives milk containing a large percentage of chalk and water is found abroad as well as at home. Residents of London are reported to be very unhappy because of their milk supply, and they threaten to make it warm for the milkmen who have been imposing on them. If the present state of affairs continues much longer the American as well as the English people will have to follow the example of the Japanese and go without milk altogether.

Now that we have secured our enormous corn crop, the question is what to do with it. Some statistician has figured out that the electric railways have displaced 275,000 horses, which would have required 125,000 bushels of corn or oats a day, or more than 45,000,000 bushels a year. With this tremendous appetite for corn eliminated and the crop larger than ever before, it is no wonder that the price is so low that the farmers and the railroads are not making the fortune they anticipated.

He is the last of the older officers who commanded an army during the war of the rebellion. He has reached the age of 64 years. He will retain his present rank and receive three-quarters of his present salary. Gen. Schofield is succeeded by Gen. Nelson A. Miles, the youngest man in that place since Gen. Sheridan. The retiring general will become an author, devoting his time to writing for the magazines and reviews.

The length of the shadow which the earth casts into space has attracted some attention since the eclipse of the moon. This shadow is in the form of a cone with the diameter of the earth as its base. It is 864,000 miles long. That is if you traveled into space, away from the earth, more than three times as far as the moon, the shadow would still shield you from the sun, provided you remained on what may be called the night side of the earth. The diameter of the sun is 866,000 miles, that of the earth is 7,926 miles, and the distance from the sun to the earth is 93,000,000 miles.

Kite-flying has never been popular among persons of mature years since Franklin's day, but now the kite is again being made to serve a good purpose in the scientific world. The experiments under the direction of the weather bureau have resulted in the obtaining of much valuable information about the atmosphere, and it has been shown that cold currents of air are to be found much nearer the earth's surface than had been heretofore supposed. The next thing in order will be the invention of some means of diverting these cool currents to the surface when needed.

IN TRIENNIAL COUNCIL.

A Notable Gathering of Episcopal Prelates in Minneapolis.

Revision of the Constitution Made a Special Order—Organization of the House of Deputies and House of Bishops.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 4.—The triennial convention of the Episcopal church was opened Wednesday morning with the celebration of holy communion. The regular order of common prayer and litany had been said at the 7 o'clock service. The epistle was read by Bishop Neely, of Maine, the Gospel was read by the archbishop of Rupert's Land, and the alms were received by Assistant Bishop Gilbert, of Minnesota. After the reading of the Gospel the sermon was delivered by Rt. Rev. Bishop Cox, of the diocese of central New York. This service was commenced at 11 o'clock and it was after 1 o'clock when Bishop Tuttle, of Missouri, pronounced the benediction.

Shortly after the formal organization of the house of deputies had been effected the consideration of the report of the commission appointed by the convention of '92 was made the special order for Thursday morning, to be continued in the same status until finally disposed of. Outside of this the proceedings of the session were of a purely routine nature. When the roll was called by Secretary Hutchins, of Hartford, Conn., between 500 and 600 clerical and lay delegates answered to their names. By unanimous vote Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, of New York, who has presided over every general convention since 1886, was elected chairman. Rev. Dr. Hutchinson, of New York, was again elected general secretary.

While the deputies were in session the house of bishops organized in Knickerbocker hall, adjoining Gethsemane church, and which had been fitted up with individual desks loaned from the senate chamber at St. Paul. In the absence of the bishops of Connecticut and Rhode Island, Bishop Whipple, the senior bishop in attendance, presided, and Bishop Doane was elected as chairman, or vice president. Rev. Dr. Hart, of Hartford, was chosen secretary. Greetings of the Church of England were presented by the archbishop of Van Rupert's Land and the bishop of Qu'Appelle, after which the bishops adjourned.

Minneapolis, Oct. 5.—The prospect of a battle royal over the disposition to be made of the revision report brought the clerical and lay delegates to the Episcopal convention out in force at Gethsemane church Thursday morning, while the galleries were crowded with local and visiting churchmen and churchwomen. At the outset of the session Dr. Dix announced the committees on the state of the church, new dioceses, canons, the prayer-book and other subjects to be brought before the convention.

After much discussion a resolution of fraternal greeting was voted sent to the Methodist conference of northern Minnesota, in session a few blocks away. This is the first time in the history of a general convention of the Episcopal church that greetings have been sent to a conference of another denomination, and the action is regarded as a significant mark of the advance of Christian unity.

In committee of the whole at the Thursday afternoon session, the house of deputies threw overboard bodily the solemn declaration of faith with which the proposed new constitution and canons was prefaced; refused to concur in the recommendation of the committee that the name of the trienial gathering be changed to the "General Synod," and likewise twice rejected a proposition to recognize the title "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States." The overwhelming victory of the anti-revisionists in the matter of the declaration of faith and principles and upon which the commission of 1892 had expended much time, thought and labor, apparently demoralized its supporters, and to the motion to reject the new name of the assemblage they made but a feeble resistance.

The anti-revisionists abandoned their intention of endeavoring to shelve the report at the outset, and, as the document, when re-revised by the present gathering, must be submitted to every diocesan convention in the United States for its action, the contest between the two elements will necessarily be renewed in the convention of '98. Meanwhile the old constitution remains in force.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 8.—When the house of deputies of the Episcopal convention commenced its fourth day's session Saturday morning Dr. Morgan Dix as chairman announced the appointment of Revs. Dr. Stone, of Chicago, Brewster, Long Island; Lawrence, Massachusetts; Judge Fairbanks, Florida, a committee to fill vacancies on the commission on church unity.

After the house had received and accepted the final report of the joint commission of 1889 on the revision of the prayer-book and which was approved at the last convention, and had also accepted a magnificently bound copy of the ritual printed on vellum, the body again went into the committee of the whole or the new constitution with Lay Delegate Packard, of Maryland, presiding. The pending question when the committee adjourned on Wednesday was the motion of Dr. Harrison, of Springfield, re-enacting the first clause of the paragraph putting into legal effect all legislation of the deputies in which the bishops had failed to concur or had demurred within three days. A number of technical amendments were submitted, the speakers in favor of the clause insisting that it was intended to prevent the bishops "pocketing" matters with which they were not in harmony.

At 11:40 o'clock the committee, in response to an urgent appeal from the general secretary of the board of missions, sent by a deputation from the Lyceum, rose by a vote of 157 to 117 and the house adjourned.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 8.—The Lyceum theater was packed Saturday morning in response to a call for a mass meeting in behalf of the missionary work of the Episcopal church. The opening hour was occupied with brief addresses from the missionary bishops of China, Japan and Africa, and ex-Secretary of State Foster was given a cordial reception upon being presented to speak upon his personal observation of foreign missions.

The missionary meeting at the Lyceum Saturday afternoon was another great success, an immense audience being present. The enthusiasm was something remarkable. Bishop Spalding, of Colorado, presided. Great progress was reported in their respective dioceses by the bishops of western Texas, Wyoming and Idaho, North Dakota, South Dakota, western Colorado and Oklahoma.

On Sunday there were elaborate musical programmes in all the Episcopal churches in the city, and the pulpits were occupied as a general thing by bishops of prominence. Large missionary and Sunday school anniversary meetings were also on the programme.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 9.—By a viva voce vote, which was sufficiently large in volume to restrain the minority from challenging a division, the house of deputies of the Episcopal convention Monday placed itself on record as being willing to surrender one of its most valuable prerogatives and practically the only one that enables it to hold the whip-hand in preventing the house of bishops from making of itself, if it were so disposed, a literal oligarchy. This was its refusal to re-enact the clause putting into effect within three days all legislation concerning which the bishops had made no sign. This clause which was omitted from the new revision after a debate in the commission which, it is said, lasted a week, enables the house of bishops to approve just as much of the legislation of the junior body and to indefinitely kill by failure to act all resolutions, reports and other matters with which it may not be in accord.

BISHOP POTTER.

This was the first victory for the revision commission after several days of debate, but their jubilation was short lived. By an overwhelming majority the house refused to exclude domestic missionary bishops in the counting of a quorum.

Then came the celebrated section three, providing for the election of a primus, or head of the house of bishops, to hold office for life, save in the event of voluntary resignation. Quickly the amendments piled up. One delegate favored a designation of "president bishop," another "archbishop," still another "presiding bishop," one more "primate." The house was not in favor of any one of the first three, nor did it kindly regard a substitute that the bishops elect their own presiding officer and give him whatever designation they might see fit. A vote had not been reached on the "Primate" proposition when the house adjourned.

CORBETT AND FITZSIMMONS.

They Can Fight in Neither Texas Nor Indian Territory.

Austin, Tex., Oct. 5.—Both houses of the legislature, in special session, passed the anti-prize fight bill Wednesday. In the senate the vote stood, yeas, 27; nays, 1. The bill makes prize-fighting a felony and imposes a punishment upon the principals for every infraction of the law by a penitentiary term of not less than two and not more than five years. On Thursday the senate passed the house amendments. The bill was then signed by the governor.

Washington, Oct. 9.—The managers of the Corbett-Fitzsimmons mill will meet with as effectual opposition at the hands of the United States government as they did with Gov. Culberson, of Texas, if they endeavor to pull off the big fight in the Indian territory. The United States statutes are sufficient to prevent the fight, and steps looking to that end are now being taken by the interior department, and should the managers of the affair invade the Indian territory they will be ejected as intruders.

MUST KEEP HANDS OFF.

Uncle Sam's Ultimatum to England Regarding Venezuela.

New York, Oct. 5.—The Washington special to the Herald says: The great international question of the hour is the Venezuela boundary line dispute. Secretary Olney has prepared a dispatch to Ambassador Bayard which will soon bring the matter to an issue which can only be settled by the retreat of one or the other government. The enforcement of the Monroe doctrine is involved. Secretary Olney's dispatch is in substance a declaration in the most positive language that the United States will never consent to British occupation of the disputed territory in Venezuela unless that nation's right thereto is first determined by arbitration."

Of Interest to G. A. R. Veterans.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 8.—Commander in Chief Walker, of the G. A. R., issued a general order Monday appointing A. J. Burbank, of Chicago, quartermaster general; William M. Olin, of Boston, inspector general, and Alfred Darte, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., judge advocate general.

Washington, Oct. 8.—Gen. Miles took possession of the army headquarters Monday. His time during the forenoon was devoted to receiving the officers on duty in Washington.

FALL TRADE.

Indications Warrant the Most Hopeful Anticipations.

New York, Oct. 7.—Bradstreet's says of the trade situation:

"Seasonable weather has stimulated sales of merchandise and increased the prospects of a favorable fall trade generally. Among the less favorable features are a modorate demand in staple lines on the Pacific coast, a reaction in the volume of business at Baltimore, and the check to the advance in prices of iron and steel, with a reaction of about one dollar per ton at Ohio valley and Pennsylvania centers.

"In a letter to the editor of Bradstreet's, concerning 'the national finances,' Hon Worthington C. Ford, chief of the bureau of statistics, treasury department, states the reasons why, in his opinion, there will be no deficit in the national revenues during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896. His estimates of the revenues for the current year is $190,000,000 from customs, $85,000,000 from taxes on distilled spirits, $60,000,000 from tobacco and fermented liquors and $16,000,000 from other sources, or a total of $351,000,000, which, it is declared, 'will be sufficient to cover the normal expenditures of the government.'

"September bank clearing reflect the spread of favorable trade conditions, but more especially where trade has been backward. Total clearings at sixty-one cities for September aggregate $4,132,855,558, a gain over August of about six-tenths of 1 per cent.; over September, 1893 (panic year), of 26 per cent. Compared with 1892 the decrease is 13 per cent. Gains are heaviest in the eastern and middle states and are larger in the western, southwestern and northwestern states than in August. Among seventy-nine cities, comparing with September last year, only one-quarter show decreases. Compared with September, 1893, only seven cities show losses. The heaviest gain shown by any large city over September last year is at Cleveland, 34 per cent., but New York, Minneapolis, Buffalo, Columbus, Boston, Pittsburgh, New Orleans and St. Louis all show heavy gains.

"Chicago sales of dry goods, clothing and shoes are larger than last week, and at St. Louis the September volume of trade is the heaviest since 1892. Minneapolis, Kansas City, St. Paul and Duluth are conspicuous for activity in trade circles. Duluth's population is now nearly 60,000, compared with 33,000 five years ago. Demand for lake freights is active, and rates are tending up. New Orleans reports large freight room engagements for December and January to load grain, and on the Pacific coast Seattle announces it will export about 1,000,000 bushels of wheat this season."

POWERS AFTER THE TURK.

A Joint Note Making Strong Demands Sent by Diplomats.

Constantinople, Oct. 6, via Sofia, Oct. 9.—The representatives of the six powers have sent a collective note to the Turkish government, calling attention to the inadequate measures taken by the police authorities to maintain public tranquillity in Constantinople and its suburbs and demanding the prompt institution of a rigorous inquiry into the recent rioting, bloodshed, and wholesale imprisonment of Armenians here. In addition, the powers demand the release of all prisoners who are innocent of wrong doing and the cessation of arrests.

It is stated on what is seemingly good authority that the representatives of the powers have ordered the warships here of the nations they represent to take their positions along the quay.

Berlin, Oct. 9.—The Tageblatt says that the Turkish populace is inflamed against England, and that the appearance of a British fleet before Constantinople is feared, as it would doubtless lead to sanguinary scenes.

The paper further says that Sir Philip Currie, the British ambassador, in his last interview with Grand Vizier Kiamil, insisted that a definite reply in regard to the reforms suggested by the powers should be given by Thursday next. If such a reply was not given, a British squadron would anchor before Constantinople and would remain in the Bosphorus until the question was settled.

HINSHAW IS CONVICTED.

Jury Recommends a Life Sentence—A New Trial Is Granted.

Danville, Ind., Oct. 4.—The jury in Rev. William E. Hinshaw's case, who was indicted for the murder of his wife at Belleville, January 10, which has been on trial for the past five weeks, returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, and that he be imprisoned for life, at 4:30 Wednesday afternoon, after being out two hours. Three members were in favor of hanging the divine. The minister never flinched when the words which consigned him to a felon's cell were read by Clerk Hathaway, but turned to the sheriff and said: "I am ready to return to the jail."

Danville, Ind., Oct. 7.—The attorneys for Rev. Hinshaw, the convicted wife murderer, have decided to carry the case to the supreme court if they do not get a new trial here. Detectives who are working on the case are said to have struck a trail at Sheridan, Ind., where they have two men under suspicion as being the burglars who killed Mrs. Hinshaw. The request of the attorneys for the defense for a new trial has been granted. They are thought to be waiting for the outcome of the detectives' search.

A FATAL WEDDING.

Seventy-Five Guests Mysteriously Poisoned—Two of Them Dead.

Dubuque, Ia., Oct. 8.—Two deaths occurred near Sabula, Jackson county, Friday as the result of a poisoning at H. D. Gage's wedding, three weeks ago, which has affected seventy-five or 100 of the 300 guests. The groom's condition is reported dangerous. The physicians from several towns are unable to agree whether the poisoning was caused by pork or by pressed chicken, and have forwarded to Chicago for analysis the biceps muscles of George Bryant, who died Friday.

Alibi Destroyed.

San Francisco, Oct. 8.—One of the greatest sensations in the Durrant case, and one which comes now as a climax with crushing weight upon the accused, has become the property of the prosecution. Theodore Durrant not only confessed to a classmate that he had no notes of Dr. Cheney's lecture, but he begged his friends to take his notes to his mother, Mrs. Durrant, that they might be copied. "I have no notes of that lecture," the accused student said, "and I only need them to complete my alibi." The student to whom Durrant made the fatal acknowledgment is his classmate and friend, Dr. Gilbert F. Graham.

Over a Million Lost by Fire.

Warren, R. I., Oct. 4.—One of the largest fires ever known in southeastern New England broke out at 7 o'clock Thursday night in one of the mills of the Warren manufacturing company, situated near the center of this town, and before it was got under control it had swept through three large cotton mills, two warehouses, small sheds, freight cars and other property, causing a loss which is estimated at $1,125,000.

"Er, that is a funny looking button you are wearing," said the man with the account. "I never saw an 'N. C.' button before. Do you belong to the Sons of North Carolina, or what?"

"Sons of nothing," replied the grocer. "That means no credit."

The man walked out without swelling the account.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE HOT WIND.

BY FLORA K. REGAL.

THIS was Mr. Carter's third year in Nebraska. He had got tired of his small farm in Ohio, with its slow returns; and when there came to him what he regarded as a good opportunity to sell it, he lost no time in closing the bargain. He invested his money and all that resulted from the sale of his farming implements and household goods in a quarter-section of land in western Nebraska, giving, as everybody did, a mortgage on the farm for the balance which he was unable to pay down. Both he and his wife had a great antipathy to giving a mortgage, but there was no other way; and then it was not so large but that in three years they could pay it off—perhaps in two, if they should have extra good crops. At all events, they would be as economical in every way as possible and pay it off at the earliest practicable day.

There was a small house on their place when they went there, new, and built purposely for the buyer; two rooms and a kitchen, with a loft in which a person could sleep, though under the middle of the roof only could one stand upright. But they regarded it as only a temporary affair, submitting cheerfully to their cramped quarters, but never losing sight of the plan to build themselves a home as soon as there was money enough to pay off the hateful mortgage.

By the third year their clothing, not too abundant when they came, began to need replenishing in every direction. Some things had to be bought for Harry and John, now thirteen and ten years old, and growing, as their mother used to say, "in genuine western fashion." But the family were careful in their outlays, and this summer's crop would give them at least the satisfaction of an unencumbered homestead.

As early in the spring as possible he set to work to get the ground in readiness and put in the seed. He had learned by this time how to do things on a large scale. He as well as his neighbors had an unusual amount of ground planted in corn; for it had been too dry in the early spring for oats, so that the ground intended for that crop was taken for corn. Day after day they had gone back and forth through the long field until a hundred acres were planted.

Hardly was the work finished when a gentle rain fell; and though it lasted but an hour it furnished the requisite moisture at the right time. In a few days the long rows could be traced by a faint line of green which grew darker and broader almost while one was looking upon it. Soon the nice work of the farmer began to appear. Whichever way one looked, forward or across or diagonally, as far as the eye could see, the lines were as straight as if run by a surveyor. He had done his part well.

Soon people began to say: "Unless we have more rain there won't be half a crop." But again there was a slight shower, and again they were hopeful; still all longed for a copious downpour.

Things were becoming somewhat dry, and pastures as well as crops were beginning to suffer, when there was noticed, one morning, a soft south wind, which Mr. Carter had been accustomed in Ohio to regard as a sure indication of rain. They were fairly jubilant at the prospect. One good rain would insure the crop. Gradually and steadily the wind increased both in velocity and temperature; it was something new. No rain! And still it blew stronger and hotter and without cessation. Everything was being dried up; but still it blew strong and steady and straight from the south. It must surely stop when the sun goes down; but what can repair the damage already done? People finally went to bed; but there was little sleep that night for the settlers. The wind still blew relentlessly and without discrimination. Everything in its course was doomed.

The next morning revealed a scene of desolation not easily described. All night long the burning wind had continued its work of destruction. The leaves of the corn instead of glistening in the sun were brown, and rattled against their stalks as if dried in a kiln. The injury done to the pastures, though less obvious, was no less complete. Hungry cattle were already circling around the parched field in search of fresh feed, and finding none. Every hour revealed some new evidence of the completeness of the ruin wrought. Everything in the garden was totally destroyed. The little trees, which had been planted the first summer, were brown as in autumn. Settlers who had been there long enough to have small fruit trees beginning to bear found the apples half baked on the trees. Nowhere could there be found any sign of vegetable life. In every direction the outlook was hopeless. Plainly there was nothing for man or beast to subsist upon the rest of the summer or the coming winter. What to do was the one engrossing question, and for it there was no answer. Stock must be disposed of at once, but where were the buyers? The horses—could it not be that such a team could be given away? Yet no one could take them. Must they be shot to keep them from starving? But how could the farm ever be worked without them? Such were the questions that were forced upon the Carter household at every turn. But the chief question, after all, was what to do with themselves. They had no friends in the east, as many had, to whom they could go for support. If they had, they had no money to go with, neither could they stay where they were with nothing to live upon.

But that was not all. The capitalist, to whom they were to have made a final payment this autumn, and then prove up their land, would have them in his power. He might foreclose, and they would not only be left penniless but would lose their farm and what money they had already paid. Look which way they might, there was no ray of light or hope.

About eleven o'clock John came running in with a scared look. "Mr. Brown is coming. I can see his buggy down the lane now."

"Heaven help us!" said the father, fairly groaning with distress. No one else said a word. As the dreaded visitor neared the house Harry went out to hitch the horse, and Mr. Brown entered.

"Good morning, Mr. Carter!"

"Morning," was the only response.

"Things look pretty bad to-day, don't they?"

"Couldn't be worse," replied Mr. Carter.

"Crops all spiled, I reckon?"

"All gone."

"Nothing surer; and they say it's that way all over the country," said Mr. Brown.

"The poorhouse won't hold us all," was the only reply.

"You haven't much prospect of paying up that little balance on the note this fall as I can see."

"IT DOES LOOK PRETTY TOUGH."

"Not a cent," said Mr. Carter, as a vision flashed across his mind of their little effects set out upon the treeless prairie, while they—

"I kinder thought that was the shape things were in, and I thought I might as well come around this morning and tell you—" Here their hearts fairly stopped beating while waiting to hear what they knew was to be their doom.

"It does look pretty tough. We've never had the 'hot wind' since I came here before. Well, as I was going to say, I made up my mind this morning that none of them that bought their land of me should be let suffer. You can just take another year for your payment, and I guess I can keep us all till spring."

Could it be? Did they hear aright? For a moment Mr. Carter was motionless, then grasping the hand of the plain old man to thank him, he still found himself unable to utter a word, while Mrs. Carter, who could restrain her tumultuous feelings no longer, suddenly threw her apron over her head and burst into a fit of convulsive weeping.

Mr. Brown had not counted on any such scene. He was well-nigh overcome himself, but grasping his hat, which he had deposited on the floor, he said to Mr. Carter: "S'pose we go out and look round a little."—N. Y. Independent.

Masculine Ideas of Dress.

In an evening dance at a summer resort a girl's gown was stepped on and torn from the waist. The offender anxiously inquired if he had hopelessly ruined the garment. "Oh, no," was the kind response, "I have only to put another breadth in it." The youth's expression changed from worry to bewilderment. "Another breadth?" he murmured in utter perplexity. The amused girl laboriously entered upon a minute explanation of the construction of a gown, the cutting and goring and stitching of the component parts. He listened with much interest. "Well," he cried, drawing a long breath, when she had finished her story; "I have learned something. I always supposed women just gathered up the stuff around their waists whole. t never dreamed that it was all cut up and then put together again."—Philadelphia Press.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Refused.

Secretary Smith refused to accept the relinquishment offered by the governor of the state of Minnesota of certain lands granted to the Hastings & Dakota railway. The case is of more than ordinary importance. The company did not earn the lands in time, but, as congress never declared a forfeiture, it is held that the land could not be forfeited. The company sold its road to the Milwaukee & St. Paul company, but retained its lands. The legislature of Minnesota declared the charter of the Hastings & Dakota forfeited and the company went out of existence. But by the operation of the Minnesota constitution it remained a corporation for all legal purposes for three years, during which time the lands were assigned to Russel Sage, the stockholder for the benefit of all the stockholders. Settlers to the number of 225 occupied a portion of the lands and about 50,000 acres are in dispute. In 1895 the legislature of Minnesota passed a bill authorizing the governor of Minnesota to relinquish the lands to the United States, which would make them public lands and secure rights of settlers upon them. Secretary Smith rejects the relinquishment. The cases of the settlers will now be decided upon their individual merits.

A Romance.

A peculiar romance is brought to light as a result of the wedding of Miss Duncan, of Bear Valley. Some time since, in getting eggs ready for market, she conceived the idea of writing on one of the eggs, requesting the finder to correspond with Miss Duncan, of Bear Valley, Minn.

The egg went on its mission, and one day, in a grocery store at Woonsocket, R. I., a young man who was unpacking eggs found the little messenger and composed a poem for the occasion. He opened correspondence with Miss Duncan, took the egg, bronzed it, and decorated the wedding cake on the occasion of their wedding.

Must Go to School.

The state labor bureau is making a practical attempt to enforce the provisions of the compulsory education law. Deputy Labor Commissioner Valesh and Inspector Eckman will soon start of a tour of inspection through the manufacturing districts of the state for the purpose of ascertaining where the child labor law is disobeyed, and wherever children are found under age working in shops and manufacturing establishments, they will be withdrawn and sent to school.

News in Brief.

During a heavy storm the Free Methodist church at Winnebago City was blown down and ruined.

Judge Kerr, of the St. Paul district court, has decided the "Steenerson wheat rate case," reversing the order of the state railroad and warehouse commission, and being on certain freight rates on grain.

Two masked men held up and shot at a lad working for Francis Curtiss, a mile above Champlin. The bullet passed through a fleshy part of the leg. A crowd scoured the vicinity, but found no trace of the men.

M. Austin, of Hutchinson, aged 82, fell from a stack while threshing and was killed.

The supreme court has named Nov. 4 as the day to hear the appeal in the Harry Hayward murder case.

John Knoll, a section hand at Hastings, was killed by a piece of steel which flew from a spike maul. The piece entered his chest.

The steamer Dan Thayer, with a raft of lumber, ran into the railroad bridge at Winona. The raft was partly saved, but the tow boat May Libby was sunk.

At Rice Lake, Dodge county, a 5-year-old son of Mrs. Penstock got hold of a loaded gun and pointed at his infant brother, who was in his mother's arms. The piece was discharged, killing the baby and badly wounding Mrs. Penstock.

With a terrible roar and crash 20 tons of rock and debris fron the Nicollet avenue side of the ruins of Westminster Presbyterian Church, Minneapolis, toppled over upon the asphalt pavement. The gale of wind, which was blowing in fitful gusts, loosened the frail support the walls had, and despite the repeated assurance of Builder Inspector Gilman that the walls were safe, a huge mass of stone crashed into the street.

The postoffice at Princeton, Minn., has been advanced from fourth-class to presidential, with a salary of $1,000 per annum.

A man about 25 years old was found dead near Evansville. It is a clear case of murder, for his skull was fractured with some blunt instrument. When found by some boys, who were attracted by groaning, he was covered by brush, face downward, and a large piece of sheet iron over his head. Near him was a crow bar, a sledge hammer and a bar of iron.

The October apportionment of moneys to the public schools by the state will be about $870,000. According to the figures showing the school enrollment of the state now in the hands of the state superintendent of schools, this will amount to $3 a pupil, an increase in the apportionment of 25 cents per capita over the apportionment of 1894.

Fire at Goodhue station, on the Duluth, Red Wing & Southern railway, destroyed the elevator of T. B. Sheldon & Co., C. E. Ricker's general store, Anderson's store, the drug store, barber shop, hotel and several buildings. The fire is supposed to have been started by tramps sleeping in the hotel barn. Eight freight cars belonging to the Chicago & Northwestern railway company were also burned.

During a very heavy northeast storm the water blown into the harbor at Duluth reached so high a point that it flooded cellars and basement warehouses along the docks. Considerable damage was done to wholesale stocks.

New Ulm is to have a new railroad. Eastern capitalists are at the head of the undertaking, and it is the intention to connect New Ulm and Winthrop during the next six months. The line will then be extended into Iowa to Missouri river points.

John Boyd, while attempting to board a moving Great Northern train at Becker, fell under the wheels and was killed.

The addition to the Amboy Elevator company's elevator, which was built by L. A. Hickok, of Mankato, and just accepted, bursted, letting 10,000 bushels of grain on the ground.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Consomme of Mutton: Place twelve mutton shanks, one pound of lean beef, and an onion, with four quarts of water, in a saucepan, and allow to simmer for four hours. Strain off. When cold place on the ice to harden, or it may be taken liquid.—Harper's Bazar.

—Tea Biscuit: Make nice soda or cream biscuit; roll out half as thick as for common biscuit; spread with four teaspoonfuls melted butter and sprinkle on half cup sugar. Roll as compactly as roll jelly cake. Cut roll off into one-inch thick slices. Lay flat on tins and bake.—Mrs. Minerva Nicolet, in Chicago Record.

—Pineapple Ice: Pare good, ripe pineapples and cut out the eyes; grate them and pass the pulp through the colander. To one quart of this add one and a quarter pounds of sugar and one pint of water; beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth and add the above little by little, beating well to make them mix, then freeze.—N. Y. Ledger.

—Old coins may be cleaned by making a hot solution of soda or potash, dipping the coins in this, then for a moment in nitric acid, followed by a thorough rinsing in clear water running from a tap. Potassium cyanide is excellent for cleaning silver coins, but it should be plainly labeled and kept away from the children, as it is strong poison.

—Potted Lobster: Parboil the lobster; cut it into small pieces, and season with mace, white pepper, nutmeg, and salt; press into a pot and cover it with butter; bake for half an hour; put in the spawn. When cold take out the lobster and put it into covered vessels with a little of the butter; beat the rest of the butter with some of the spawn, and cover the lobster with it.

—Ginger Cake: A cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of butter, and two eggs. Dissolve one-half teaspoonful of soda in one-half cupful of milk. Add about two cupfuls of flour, in which sift a teaspoonful of cream tartar. Add also a tablespoonful of ginger. Bake slowly about three-quarters of an hour in a square baking sheet, and when cool make two layers and spread cream between them on top. A little grated cocoanut dusted over before serving is an improvement. — Farm, Field and Fireside.

—Reform in the Bedroom.—We shall be a healthier and happier race when the double bed is banished. The light iron or brass bedstead with a mattress that can be easily aired and kept clean, is the bed that ought to be generally used. And the heavy comforter ought to be banished with the double bed, for it belongs to the log cabin and the backwoods. The bed covering par excellence is a lightweight blanket that can be frequently washed and kept soft and white. Tucking the bedclothes tightly in is another custom handed down by dwellers in Arctic wilds. The practice of making up a bed and making it almost airtight is as unhealthful as it is unclean.—Mary Porter Langley, in Orange Judd Farmer.

—A Favorite Cake: Two eggs, one cup of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of milk, one-fourth tablespoonful of baking-powder and a rounding cupful of flour. Beat the yolks of eggs and sugar together, add the whites well beaten, then the milk in which the salt is dissolved; lastly the baking-powder and flour well mixed together. Bake in two round pie tins, lined with buttered paper. When cold, spread the lemon butter between the cakes, and sift sugar over the top. This cake is better on the second or third day after baking than when fresh, therefore very convenient to make when preparing for an unexpected guest. The quantity of lemon mixture is sufficient for two or three cakes, but we usually make but one, keeping the filling until we want another cake.—Western Rural.

AUTUMN WOOLENS.

Stylish Fabrics for Fall Costumes for the Ladies.

Rough-surfaced woolens are imported for the first autumn gowns. These come with knotted bourette threads and in boucle effects in loops of mohair: also in irregular weaving so open that it seems too sleazy and light for winter gowns. This light weight is, however, well considered in view of the heavy silk linings and other accessories of soft woolen skirts. New Scotch tweeds are a melange of colors without the suggestions of checks used in summer tweeds. The quiet and grave grounds of brown, gray, or mixed black and white, are enlivened by occasional threads of bright green, vivid red or glowing orange.

One of the most novel effects among the importations is a wool fabric resembling Turkish towelling, the threads projecting from the surface very thickly, and divided by stripes or slender lines of plush, or velvet placed an inch and a half apart. These are very attractive in violet or damson shades striped with bright green velvet, or in golden-brown wool with dull green plush lines. That there may be variety in winter outfits some very soft and fine camel's-hair twills are imported in plaids not too large, and usually of a single color, mordore, prune or green with black. Other twills of dark ground have a design of diamonds, or of stripes in black mohair loops that are as glossy as silk. Mediterranean blue with black, plum color and black and the popular green or brown with black are the combinations most used in these boucle woola.—Harper's Bazar.

Fruits to Make Jam.

The good housewife who is laying up a stock of goodies for the cold winter days will appreciate a hint about preserving fruits. All varieties of berries will be found excellent for jam. They should be picked over carefully, weighed and mashed and put into a kettle with half a pound of sugar for every pound of fruit. The boiling should be slow, and constant stirring is necessary to prevent sticking. The fruit and sugar should be cooked together until thick and smooth, but never stiff, or the jam becomes marmalade. If the berry seeds are objectionable the fruit should be rubbed through a sieve before cooking, leaving the pulp and juice free of seeds, thus forming a seedless jam. Figs, quinces, plums, apricots and oranges make a good jam. Cooked in clear water until tender, washed and put into a kettle with sugar and set over a fire and boiled until thick, any of these fruits yield fine results. All jam should be put into small glass jars, covered closely and set in a cool, dark place.—Chicago Chronicle.

THE LONE WOMAN.

A Source of Comfort to Those Who Are in Trouble.

The cheery single woman has her work in her home as long as that blessing is spared to her, and when she is left without near and dear ones she finds that she can be a comfort to others and do good service in various helpful ways—social, personal and charitable. Mothers soon learn that she is one of their faithful aids and proud of the title of parents' assistant. Little children love her, as she enters into their amusements and sympathizes with their small griefs, frolicking as merrily as the gayest sprite among them, and always ready to bind up the wounded heart or the cut finger. Young men and maidens confide their petty secrets to her discretion, and elder people enjoy the delicate attentions she delights to bestow. Should work be a stern necessity of this spinster's life, she must often find herself overweighted with cares and anxieties; but, to her credit be it said, there is almost never the inclination to indulge in vain and useless repinings. Thus the real lone woman is not the one who persistently and cheerfully conquers the difficulties of a solitary life, meeting its trials with a disarming smile, and guarding herself against falling into that ineffably dreary state which is meant by the designation; nor is it she who, debarred from all activity by ill health, possesses in perfection the rare art of self-effacement, and who tranquilly and deftly fits herself to her "perpetual maidenhood."—Harper's Bazar.

TROLLEY CARS AND PILLS.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

Mrs. Anna Burns, of 338 Plane Street, Newark, N. J., is a decidedly pretty brunette, twenty-six years old, tall, and a pleasing conversationalist. On the ground floor of her residence she conducts a well-ordered candy store. When our reporter visited her store she, in response to a question, told him a very interesting story.

"Until about two months ago," she began, "I enjoyed the very best of health and could work night and day if necessary. Suddenly, and without any apparent cause, I began to suffer from intense pains in my head, in my limbs and temples. Almost distracted with this seemingly never ending pain I tried cure after cure, prescription after prescription and almost a gallon of medicine of all kinds. Nothing did me any good. In fact I became worse. The knuckles of my hands soon became cramped and the pain in my hips became more and more distressing each day. Business in the store had to be attended to, however, and so I was obliged, suffering as I was, to keep more or less on my feet, and occasionally I was forced to go out. This was the ordeal I dreaded. Each time I went out I trembled when I came near the car tracks, for my pain at times was so severe that I was obliged to stand perfectly still, no matter where I was. On one occasion I was seized in this way while I was crossing the tracks on Market Street, and there I stood perfectly rigid, unable to move hand or foot while a trolley car came thundering along. Fortunately it was stopped before it struck me, but the dread of it all lasted as long as my pain, for I never knew when crossing the tracks whether I would not drop to the ground in my agony and be crushed to death. My anxiety to get well grew apace, and I had about given up in despair when I saw in the Evening News one day an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Here was something I hadn't tried before, and I lost no time in getting to the nearest drug store. There I paid fifty cents for a box of these truly wonderful health-restoring pills. Before I had finished taking half of the pills I began to feel relieved; the pains in my hips gradually disappeared, and for the first time in many days I felt as if there was some hope. I continued to take the pills, and the more I took the better I felt. I finished one box, got another, and now, having taken only a few of the second fifty cents' worth, I am free from all pain and as happy as the day is long. Since I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I have gained thirty pounds, and now when I cross the car tracks I don't care if there is a dozen vehicles near by. It is a great relief, I assure you, and suffering humanity has a never-failing friend in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I know what I am talking about. I speak from experience."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Why One Shouldn't Drink.

The reason why drinking should not accompany eating, but be indulged in before or afterward, is, in the first place, because liquids are food as well as solids, and repasts must be kept as light as possible at all costs. But there is another reason. Dry repasts, if light, lead to a loss of flesh, whereas the same quantity of food, if it include liquids, is devoid of this effect. It is not easy to say why this should be so; but the most probable explanation is that when only solids are eaten the juices of the body are called into action to a larger extent than otherwise, in order to further the progress of digestion, whence a sensation of thirst is usually experienced. The body has thus lost more than the ordinary quantity of water, and if this loss be not compensated by drinking it will be replaced by the body itself, which will draw upon its superfluous fat for the purpose. The fat is decomposed into the elements, and combustion takes place. This process commences about an hour after eating, and if drinking be deferred until then it may be indulged in afterward with profit, inasmuch as it promotes the very process which half an hour earlier it would have prevented. But in any case, and at all times during the cure, liquids must be taken with as much moderation as solids.—Detroit Free Press.

Altogether Improbable.

"He is a man of wisdom and honesty and perfectly straightforward in his methods," wrote the new reporter, and a little later he added: "He has been in politics all his life."

And when the city editor saw the two sentences in the same paragraph he tossed the manuscript back to the reporter with the remark:

"We try to avoid romance in our political department."—Chicago Post.

His Occupation Gone.

First Detective—You look blue this morning. What's the matter.

Second Detective—Did you read about a convict at Sing Sing confessing on his deathbed that he murdered a man in New York?

"Yes, I read all about it."

"Well that spoils a clew I have been working on for a year and a half."—Texas Siftings.

—Reconsidered.—"Grabbins doesn't want anything but the earth," said the sarcastic man. "You're wrong there," replied his cynical friend. "Grabbins used to be that way, but somebody told him that the earth is the smallest of the planets, and he has changed his mind."—Washington Star.

HOME TALK.

Lengthy Speeches Still Fashionable With the Colored Element.

The death of Prof. Daniel B. Williams, dean of the Virginia Normal and Collegiate institute, and professor of Latin and Greek, recalls an amusing incident of the life of the Sun reporter. The latter was on a lecture trip in the south and found himself in Richmond, some ten years ago. The Afro-Americans of the city were to celebrate the anniversary of the emancipation proclamation. The orator who had been selected for the occasion sent word at the last moment that he could not be present. The Sun reporter was waited upon by a solemn committee and asked to fill the bill. On the appointed day about seventy-five thousand Afro-Americans filled the streets of Richmond. The white population took to the woods. Early in the morning a slow drizzling rain set in. The line of march was up Broad street to the Lee monument. When the procession reached there it was raining too hard for out-door orations, and it marched back down town and halted in front of one of the old-time residences with flowing verandas and the like. The speakers ascended to the second story of the building. From the great veranda the speakers looked down upon a sea of black faces, every one of which appeared to be weeping silent tears, as a result of the slow-dripping rain. The grand marshal of the day looked out upon the sea of weeping faces and said: "Ladies and Gemmen: On 'count of de clemency of de wedder all de speakers gwine ter cut dey remarks short." The Sun reporter took the grand marshal at his word, and instead of delivering his carefully address made a fifteen minutes' extemporaneous talk. At the end of it the grand marshal introduced "Prof. Williams, a home boy we all loves, who gwine ter wake up de echoes." He did. He spoke one hour and a half to the sea of upturned faces, down which the pearl drops of rain trickled, giving them all the appearance of weeping. When the agony was over The Sun reporter rushed out in the street, but the crowd was so great that he could make but little head way. Right in front of him were two aged people talking about the speaking. One of them said: "Doan tell me 'bout dese norden people; dey's no good. Dat New York man git up 'ere and speak o'ny fifteen minute, an' nobody hear 'im. Now, dere's Brudder Williams; he's home talent. We knows 'im. He git up an' he speak a whole half er hour. Gimme de home talent all de time."—N. Y. Sun.

The sulphur fumes will, also, rid the house of flies, bugs mice and other pests.

—We brought home with us from the South some persimmons, an Alabama apple; a cactus and some rock from Orchard Knob; a piece of grapevine and a branch of a honey locus, from Alatoona pass; a piece of cornstalk, from Murfreesboro; pieces of the largest block of marble ever quarried; and a piece of President Polk's tomb, recently torn down.

Hennepin History.

MARKVILLE, Oct. 8, 1895.

I wish to inform the readers of the GAZETTE that the "Minneapolis and Hennepin County History" Agents are trying to git in their work again. I have been summonsed to appear at the Justice Court, holden at Temple Court, Minneapolis, Oct. 12, 1895. My council will put the case off until Oct. 19. The article in a recent issue of the Eagle referring to the books, spoke in such glowing terms that one would suppose the controversy was about the BOOKS instead of the MANNER in which the agents were trying to unload the books onto parties that never contracted for them in any manner. We are aware that the books have nice bindings, but we could not afford the books just because their bindings were so elaborate. We are also aware that there are fine pictures, beautiful photographs, etc, but we did not feel able to purchase such books on account of the pictures. There are not many people in the country who care for such a wholesale collection of pictures of the business men of Minneapolis would considerably rather have our more intimate friends. The facts of the case with us are simply that we never signed, nor in any manner contracted with any living person for the books. If we had we should surely redeem our obligation. It would not be necessary for us to purge our names; nor appear before our friends with such bloated, white-livered lies as are imputed, simply to get out of paying the $18. We have lived in Hennepin County 21 years; now if there is any party that knows of fraud, or any dishonest action on our part we would like to have them materialize at once. In the face of all this, to have a man call on you and demand $18 for books you never contracted for, have this man pull out a list with your name attached and declare you signed it, and fly into the air threaten you with law! Law! Law!-!-! until your patience was exausted and you wished the Books, agents and all was consigned to the lowest deepths of HADES.

This is the peoples battle, there are quite a large number of us in the same boat on whom all maners of tricks has been played. I am sure the better element of society, will never allow these fellows to go off with flying collors fleecing hundreds of dollars out of parties that owe them no manner of an obligation no more so than an inhabitant of Jupitor.—The comming people should, and no doubt will, learn a wholesome lesson by this affair, and in the future completly turn down, Book Agents, Machine Agents, Etc.

If this affair could be hustled through the courts, there would be no safety in owning any property, any maner of goods could be left at your place and in a day or so some one could appear with your name forged, as in this book affair and you would be compelled to pony up. Shylock wants his pound of flesh. If any of you victims have any FACTS bearing on this "Book buisness please let me know of it at once S. R. SPATES.

The General Passenger Department of the Great northern Railway is gathering all the crop statistics it can procure for use in its publications, and respectfully requests farmers to send in any item of interest on the subject. If the reader of this has raised a big pumpkin or melon, a mammoth squash or turnip, or had an unusual yield of wheat, oats, flax, corn, barley, potatoes, onions, beans, or any of the products of the field, garden, orchard or vineyard, just send the facts to this Office, and we will see that they are placed in proper hands. Such items are of real interest, and the Great Northern will publish the reports, and so will give this paper, and give the grower full credit. Closely allied is the Spatulated Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine prepares especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, condensed in a small space, so that the record of the whole world's work for a month may be read in half an hour. The Conical Type indicates refinement, culture, and a love of music, poetry, and fiction. A person with this type of thumb will thoroughly enjoy the literary attractions of Demorest's Magazine. The Artistic Type indicates a love of beauty and art, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent oil-picture of roses, 16½ x 24 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpré, the most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1895. The cost of this superb work of art was $350.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite oil or water-color picture is published in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so profusely and superbly illustrated that the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the thumb of the thinker and inventor of ideas, who will be deeply interested in those developed monthly in Demorest's Magazine, in every one of its numerous departments, which cover the entire artistic and scientific field, chronicling every fact, fancy, and find of the day. Demorest's is simply a perfect Family Magazine, and was long ago crowned Queen of the Monthlies. Send in your subscription; it will cost only $2.00, and you will have a dozen Magazines to one. Address W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, Publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York. Though not a fashion magazine, its perfect fashion plates, and its articles on family and domestic matters, will be of superlative interest to those possessing the Feminine Type of Thumb, which indicates in its small size, slenderness, soft nail, and smooth, rounded tip, those traits which belong essentially to the nobler sex. every one of w om should subscribe to Demorest's Magazine. If you are unacquainted with its merits, send for a specimen copy (free), and you will admit that seeing these THUMBS has put you in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of the whole family.

FRESH FROM THE PEN.

Once on a time, an editor,
Who led no life of ease,
Unto a country patron wrote
In words somewhat like these:
"Dear sir, we'll save a space for you,
If you will tell us when
You'll favor us, if speedily,
With something from your pen."

The granger read with some surprise
This singular request;
The little touch of flattery
Urged him to do his best.
And so in quite a liberal mood
He hied him forth and then
Selected from his growing stock,
Two pigs from out the pen.

Well might that worthy editor
Display some mild surprise,
When in the sanctum's quiet depths
This sight should meet his eyes—
A grinning farmer, hat in hand,
(The proudest of all men)
And in the box upon the floor
The products of his pen.
—Mrs. J. E. Treat, in Texas Siftings.

REED AND MERRIAM are mentioned as a possible combination for an attempt of the G. O. P. to carry the country from Maine to Minnesota in '96.

J. ADAM BEDE and wife have returned home to Duluth, having completed their bicycle toure of Europe. There seems to J. Adam to be no place like the "unsalted city by the zinuth sea." And Duluth is a great city.

ANOTHER long list of names of Missouri citizens is being brought up to work on the sympathies of Gov. Clough praying for the pardon of Cole and James Younger. Those Missourians are certainly persistent if nothing else

JERRY ROOT of Fort Ripley is said to have offered to raise a company of soldiers to go to Cuba next month if he can be given encouragement to do so. Others in different parts of the country have made similar offers. Cubans appear to have the sympaties of many Americans, in their fight with Spain.

IN his great speech in favor of the gold standard Ex Governor Merriman is quoted as saying: "The very life blood of the great arteries of commerce is in constant danger." Of course; and does the gentleman expect to cure the patient while excluding from the arterial system the white corpuscles. Bleeding patients to death in the hopes of curing them has well nigh gone out of date.

THE Pioneer Press favors trying the curfew ordinance, and says: "if it diminishes the number of juvenile offenders in St. Paul by even a small proportion it is worthy of a test." It is a pretty bad state of affairs when a great metropolitan daily feels itself called upon to make such a statement as that! And to advocate such a remedy! If the police authorities are not able to cope with offenders against the peace and dignity of the city a stronger force might be of service: but it can hardly be expected that the evil disposed will hie themselves off to bed every night simply because the city fathers so order; but they will continue to commit their depredations and will have to be run down by the police just the same as of yore, with the additional trouble to the officer of stopping every time he comes up to a boy or girl to enquire "What business have you out!" It would look better to catch the culprits and not punish the inoffensive.

FRIEND MCGARY in his musings intimates that those who advised farmers to diversefy their crops and other farm products was giving poor advice. He should consider the environments. He should think that as Grover Cleveland has said "a condition and not a theory confronts us." We are living in a time when greed and gain have run rampant for a long time. When people have been forced to believe that in order to keep their necks from foreign yokes they must raise the tarriff on every possible article until no one could trade with our nation, that like a poor benighted clam we must live within our own shell. This has been carried to such an extreme that people are now out of luck who have to buy anything, and the farmer who has followed the advice to diversify as much as possible now finds himself supplied with plenty to eat at least and instead of buying his potatoes as last year, he has some to sell or to feed.

In ordinary times when things move along as designed by the Maker without the hindrance of protective tariffs it would be wiser for people perhaps, and better paying for them to raise the one crop for which their land and climate was adopted and rely on others for other necessaries and luxuries. No one expects the miller to run his own blacksmith shop: or the blacksmith to grind his own flour: but each must rely on his neighbor for something. Why then should a farmer be obliged to buy a full set of agricultural tools for raising several kinds of crops some of which his land is poorly adopted to raise. Would it not be more economical for one farmer to have a full equipment of implements for tending one kind of crop, that best addopted to his farm and which will pay him best. It would hardly be expected that a Minnesota man would fit himself out with a full line of machinery for placing on the market, and plant his farm to cotton: nor would a Georgian depend on a wheat crop. It also requirers some knowledge of the business But under existing circumstances it seems that Minnesota farmers who use the head as well as the hands and raise a diversity of crops do best.

CALIFORNIA.

HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

Your Long Lake correspondent is once more in California, having left Minnesota, Sept. 4. and arriving at Los Angeles, Cal. on the 12th., and although a chronic invalid he stood the trip quite well. The route travelled was circuitous but for all that it was made on the lines of but two corporations, namely: The Northern Pacific Portland, Oregon, and the Southern Pacific (Shasta Route ect.) from Portland to Los Angeles, and after making three different trips to and from the Mississippi river to the Pacific coast, your correspondent regards the N. P. and Shasta route as being the most interesting and picturesque. The mountain scenery on the latter being varied by frequent and extensive covering of forests of gigantic evergreen tumber or coniferious timber, while the more southerly routes also pass through stupendious grotesque mountain scenery, they are accompanied by a destitution of live trees or vegetation, almost a continuous desert: that becomes monotonous and tiresome to the eye, to which may be added the penetrating sand and dust of those arid regions which finds its way into the well fortified Pullman Sleepers and even to eyes, nostrils and teeth of the traveller.

On this trip Mounts Tacoma and Hood were obscured by smoke, dust and clouds, that part of the world having a season of dronth at that time. On passing through the mountains of Northern California a good view of Mount Shasta was obtained. It was truly a grand sight as was the entire mountain district of that region, known as the Shasta Mountains.

The fare (limited tickets) by the N. P. and S. P. Railways to San Francisco, Los Angeles and other points on the Pacific Coast is the same as that of the more southernly routes to the same points. The journey by the N. P. and S. P. occupies a few days but the tourist seems to be compensated for the difference in time by the absence of heat and dust in traveling during the warmer months of the year and by many other interesting features.

On a return after sixteen months absence one finds many improvements in the city of Los Angels and other California towns. Southern Californians insist that they are having a boom whether it can be so designated is hard for the stranger to decide but it may at least be designated as progressiveness.

The wether.—For several days about the middle of September the thermometer ran up to about 90 degrees during the day and somewhat cooler during the night which was followed later by a several days of fine weather neither too warm nor too cold. During the closing week of September thermometer during daytime ran from 90 to 97 degrees dropping to 56 degrees during the night.

The people state that these recent September warm spells were the most umpleasant of the year. October thus has been accompained by the pleasanter weather, ranging from 56 to 70 and 75 daily. There has been no rainfall of any account as yet. The country is dry and dusty. Even the foliage of the trees, is laden with dust. The irrigation process is still in operation at present.

Mc Gary Some More.

MR. EDITOR,—In looking over the situation of things in regard to our country and the political arena I am reminded of a chess board with the game half played and in my imagination this country is nothing more nor less than a raffle box, or a wheel of fortune,

In a good many of the papers we see long articles with headlines something like this "Advice to Farmers." We would say many thanks; small favors thankfully received and large ones in proportion. One fellow says "Do not raise so much grain; go into something else. Another fellow says "Diversify your crops; and if you can't do any better raise cane. This I think we will be compelled to do unless things take a change for the better. The crops have been pretty well diversified this year and the farmers do not seem to get much of a price for anything. If we could grow government bonds on pumpkin vines we might do well. Can anybody tell what's the trouble. If they can we wish they would give us a solution of the problem.

In order to trace the lineal descendants of the Jewish nation it would be proper to go back several thousand years. But in order to trace out where fraud, deception and humbuggery began in this country we only have to turn the calander back about 35 years At the beginning of 61 there was inaugurated in this country a great civil war and a whole nation was up in arms At every cross roads and voting precinct there was a mustering ground. The war came and for four years this country received a baptism of fraternal blood The results of all wars are demoralizing; and this one being no exception to the rule we found at the close of the war that many men had become hardened, intemprent, dishonest and had aquired a mania for making money even at the risk of honor and reputation the seed of their element is with us today and from a large emigration from foreign Countrys many of them helped to strengthen this bad element. In a year or two after the war real estate took a boom wateredstock of all kinds were put upon the market and the country went wild with speculation everything sold at fabulous prices. Men bought land and city property farmers bought machinery at a high price, gave their notes for almost any amount the dealer would ask. Most of this was done on paper when times were flush and they took no thought of the drop that would come by and by. Now a good many people say all these hard times came through the Democratic party and the present administration. The Democratic party is guilty of a good many blunders and perhaps, some very mean things: but the foundation for these hard times was laid before the Democratic party got a smell at the White House. What we most need or should have is less of party and of self and more for the country and the people.

A high protective tariff will not immortalize this country (as some think). Neither will a single gold standard give to the masses of the people prosperity and a healthy growth. We hear men talk of patriotism and love of country; with many of them this is only a farce, and a Pharasee way of expressing their love of country. We read in Holy Writ "if the rightous are scarcely saved where shall the sinner and ungodly appear." Now if the bankers and bondholders, money kings get control of all the wealth of this country what will become of the poor people? They will have for a home the middle of the road, and the heavens for a covering. Prejudice and party affiliation will save no country from existing evils that suround it.

Neither is a gold reserve fund and issuing government bonds in time of peace incentive to the people of this country but it seems our country has become a kind of a pon shop (bond shop). The United States Treasurer and the concience of the people have become articles of merchandise and are for sale (or Sail) to the higest bider.

In these days there is lots of food for the average crank. J. H. M.

London, Oct. 16.—A dispatch to the "Times" from Paris says that a deed making a present of Kosciusko's heart to Poland was made yesterday in the presence of Counts Morosino and Castand of the composer, Mogoti. The patriot's heart is designed for the Polish museum in Raperswiji, near Zurich.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 11, 1895.

President Cleveland will make a short stay in Washington, as he is due at the Atlanta Exposition next week. When he returns from Atlanta he will settle down to the winter's work, and he will find plenty of it on hand. In addition to other important work which he must take up, he will have only a little more than a month within which to wright his annual message to Congress, and it will probably be one of the most difficult messages he has ever had to write. The message although addressed to Congress will really be writen to the country, as no body knows any better than the President that nothing short of overwhelming public sentiment will be sufficient to make the republican Congress accept his recommendations as to legislation, however wise they may be.

When a man makes a gigantic ass of himself the best thing he can do is to keep still about it. Some men don't know enough to do this. One of them is Lord Sackville West, who was British Minister to the United States until given his passport, in 1888, by Secretary Bayard, who acted under the instructions of President Cleveland, for having allowed himself to be trapped into wrighting a letter to be used as a republican campaign document. That Sackville should be sore is natural. But in raking up the whole business in a pamplet published for distribution among his friends he has not vindicated himself; he has only confirmed the previously held opinion of him and showed that the years which have passed since his humiliating departure from America have added nothing to his discretion. The dime museum manager who offered him an engagement then would be glad to give him double the money now; and as a freak he would unquestionably draw well.

Hon. Amos Cummings, able newspaper man Tamany democrat and all around good fellow, spent a day in Washington this week. Everybody in Washington will be glad when Amos comes back to Congress, and, judging from what he says, there is little doubt of his coming. This is the way he puts it: "My nomination for Congress to fill the vacancy in one of the New York districts is, of course, a subject of satisfaction to me. I feel complimented, and, further, I feel confident of being elected. There seems to be no doubt of democratic success in the city of New York; Rooseyelt has made sure of that. It now looks as if the democracy would carry the district in which I now run, as well as the city of New York, by a fair majority."

Kentuckians who come to Washington all talk one way about the result of the present campaign. Mr. W. N. Cox, of Louisville, says: "It takes no prophet to tell what the result will be. Hardin will be elected governor by 25,00 majority, and this is a conservative estimate. Senator Blackburn is as good as reelected to succeed himself. He is still making speeches, but he might as well put a stop to his oratory, for enough votes to elect him have already been secured."

Perhaps it is merely a coincidence, but all the same it is worthy of more than a passing notice that the arrival of the new Hawaiian minister, Mr. Castale, in Washington, was very closely followed by a sensational story about the alleged designs which Japan has upon Hawaii, and the fears of the present Hawaiian government that those designs will be realized and the islands be gobbled up by Japan. Last year it was England that was frightening the government of Hawaii. There is just about as much danger from Japan now as there was from England last year. Doubtless either or both countries would be glad to have the islands, but in view of the very positive declaration of Congress, that no foreign interferance with Hawaii be tolerated by the United States, it is not probable that either of them has seriously entertained any designs upon the islands. If, as many believe, these stories are set afloat by those in the employ by the present Hawaiian government for the purpose of influencing public sentiment in this country President Dole and his advisers are being misled.

Secrecary Carlisle left Washington today far Boston, where he will deliver a financial address before the Reform Club Saturday night.

Senator Gorman's charge that the republican candidate for governor of Maryland was named for the position by the B. & O railroad is the political sensation of the week, and it has greatly injured the chances of the republican ticket in Maryland. Mr. Gorman is not the man to make charges unless fortified with the facts to back them up. He knew what he was talking about when he made that charge, or he would not have made it; and the Maryland voters may be trusted to do the rest. The State will remain in the democratic column.

FRESH FROM THE PEN.

Once on a time, an editor,
Who led no life of ease,
Unto a country patron wrote
In words somewhat like these:
"Dear sir, we'll save a space for you,
If you will tell us when
You'll favor us, if speedily,
With something from your pen."

The granger read with some surprise
This singular request;
The little touch of flattery
Urged him to do his best.
And so in quite a liberal mood
He bled him forth and then
Selected from his growing stock,
Two pigs from out the pen.

Well might that worthy editor
Display some mild surprise,
When to the sanctum's quiet depths
This sight should meet his eyes—
A grinning farmer, hat in hand,
(The proudest of all men)
And in the box upon the floor
The products of his pen.
—Mrs. J. E. Treat, in Texas Siftings.

REED AND MERRIAM are mentioned as a possible combination for an attempt of the G. O. P. to carry the country from Maine to Minnesota in '96.

J. ADAM BEDE and wife have returned home to Duluth, having completed their bicycle toure of Europe. There seems to J. Adam to be no place like the "unsalted city by the zinuth sea." And Duluth is a great city.

ANOTHER long list of names of Missouri citizens is being brought up to work on the sympathies of Gov. Clough praying for the pardon of Cole and James Younger. Those Missourians are certainly persistent if nothing else

JERRY ROOT of Fort Ripley is said to have offered to raise a company of soldiers to go to Cuba next month if he can be given encouragement to do so. Others in different parts of the country have made similar offers. Cubans appear to have the sympaties of many Americans, in their fight with Spain.

IN his great speech in favor of the gold standard Ex Governor Merriman is quoted as saying: "The very life-blood of the great arteries of commerce is in constant danger." Of course; and does the gentleman expect to cure the patient while excluding from the arterial system the white corpuscles. Bleeding patients to death in the hopes of curing them has well nigh gone out of date.

THE Pioneer Press favors trying the curfew ordinance, and says: "if it diminishes the number of juvenile offenders in St. Paul by even a small proportion it is worthy of a test." It is a pretty bad state of affairs when a great metropolitan daily feels itself called upon to make such a statement as that! And to advocate such a remedy! If the police authorities are not able to cope with offenders against the peace and dignity of the city a stronger force might be of service: but it can hardly be expected that the evil disposed will hie themselves off to bed every night simply because the city fathers so order; but they will continue to commit their depredations and will have to be run dawn by the police just the same as of yore, with the additional trouble to the officer of stopping every time he comes up to a boy or girl to enquire "What business have you out?" It would look better to catch the culprits and not punish the inoffensive.

FRIEND McGARY in his musings intimates that those who advised farmers to diversefy their crops and other farm products was giving poor advice He should consider the environments. He should think that as Grover Cleveland has said "a condition and not a theory confronts us." We are living in a time when greed and gain have run rampant for a long time. When people have been forced to believe that in order to keep their necks from foreign yokes they must raise the tarriff on every possible article until no one could trade with our nation, that like a poor benighted clam we must live within our own shell. This has been carried to such an extreme that people are now out of luck who have to buy anything, and the farmer who has followed the advice to diversify as much as possible now finds himself supplied with plenty to eat at least and instead of buying his potatoes as last year, he has some to sell or to feed.

In ordinary times when things move along as designed by the Maker without the hindrance of protective tariffs it would be wiser for people perhaps, and better paying for them to raise the one crop for which their land and climate was adopted and rely on others for other necessaries and luxuries. No one expects the miller to run his own blacksmith shop: or the blacksmith to grind his own flour: but each must rely on his neighbor for something. Why then should a farmer be obliged to buy a full set of agricultural tools for raising several kinds of crops some of which his land is poorly adopted to raise. Would it not be more economical for one farmer to have a full equipment of implements for tending one kind of crop, that best addopted to his farm and which will pay him best. It would hardly be expected that a Minnesota man would fit himself out with a full line of machinery for placing on the market, and plant his farm to cotton: nor would a Georgian depend on a wheat crop. It also requires some knowledge of the business But under existing circumstances it seems that Minnesota farmers who use the head as well as the hands and raise a diversity of crops do best.

CALIFORNIA.

HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

Your Long Lake correspondent is once more in California, having left Minnesota, Sept. 4 and arriving at Los Angeles, Cal. on the 12th., and although a chronic invalid he stood the trip quite well. The route travelled was circuitous but for all that it was made on the lines of but two corporations, namely: The Northern Pacific Portland, Oregon, and the Southern Pacific (Shasta Route ect.) from Portland to Los Angeles, and after making three different trips to and from the Mississippi river to the Pacific coast, your correspondent regards the N. P. and Shasta route as being the most interesting and picturesque. The mountain scenery on the latter being varied by frequent and extensive covering of forests of gigantic evergreen timber or coniferious timber, while the more southerly routes also pass through stupendious grotesque mountain scenery, they are accompanied by a destitution of live trees or vegetation, almost a continuous desert: that becomes monotonous and tiresome to the eye, to which may be added the penetrating sand and dust of those arid regions which finds its way into the well fortified Pullman Sleepers and even to eyes, nostrils and teeth of the traveller.

On this trip Mounts Tacoma and Hood were obscured by smoke, dust and clouds, that part of the world having a season of dronth at that time. On passing through the mountains of Northern California a good view of Mount Shasta was obtained. It was truly a grand sight as was the entire mountain district of that region, known as the Shasta Mountains.

The fare (limited tickets) by the N. P. and S. P. Railways to San Francisco, Los Angeles and other points on the Pacific Coast is the same as that of the more southernly routes to the same points. The journey by the N. P. and S. P. occupies a few days but the tourist seems to be compensated for the difference in time by the absence of heat and dust in traveling during the warmer months of the year and by many other interesting features.

On a return after sixteen months absence one finds many improvements in the city of Los Angels and other California towns. Southern Californians insist that they are having a boom whether it can be so designated is hard for the stranger to decide but it may at least be designated as progressiveness.

The wether.—For several days about the midele of September the thermometer ran up to about 90 degrees during the day and somewhat cooler during the night which was followed later by a several days of fine weather neither too warm nor too cold. During the closing week of September thermometer during daytime ran from 90 to 97 degrees dropping to 56 degrees during the night.

The people state that these recent September warm spells were the most umpleasant of the year. October thus has been accompained by the pleasanter weather, ranging from 56 to 70 and 75 daily. There has been no rainfall of any account as yet. The country is dry and dusty. Even the foliage of the trees, is laden with dust. The irrigation process is still in operation at present.

Mc Gary Some More.

MR. EDITOR,—In looking over the situation of things in regard to our country and the political arena I am reminded of a chess board with the game half played and in my imagination this country is nothing more nor less than a raffle box, or a wheel of fortune,

In a good many of the papers we see long articles with headlines something like this "Advice to Farmers." We would say many thanks; small favors thankfully received and large ones in proportion. One fellow says "Do not raise so much grain: go into something else. Another fellow says "Diversify your crops; and if you can't do any better raise cane. This I think we will be compelled to do unless things take a change for the better. The crops have been pretty well diversified this year and the farmers do not seem to get much of a price for anything. If we could grow government bonds on pumpkin vines we might do well. Can anybody tell what's the trouble. If they can we wish they would give us a solution of the problem.

In order to trace the lineal descendants of the Jewish nation it would be proper to go back several thousand years. But in order to trace out where fraud, deception and humbuggery began in this country we only have to turn the calander back about 35 years At the beginning of 61 there was inaugurated in this country a great civil war and a whole nation was up in arms At every cross roads and voting precinct there was a mustering ground. The war came and for four years this country received a baptism of fraternal blood The results of all wars are demoralizing; and this one being no exception to the rule we found at the close of the war that many men had become hardened, intemperent, dishonest and had acquired a mania for making money even at the risk of honor and reputation the seed of their element is with us today and from a large emigration from foreign Countrys many of them helped to strengthen this bad element. In a year or two after the war real estate took a boom water edstock of all kinds were put upon the market and the country went wild with speculation everything sold at fabulous prices. Men bought land and city property farmers bought machinery at a high price, gave their notes for almost any amount the dealer would ask. Most of this was done on paper when times were flush and they took no thought of the drop that would come by and by. Now a good many people say all these hard times came through the Democratic party and the present administration. The Democratic party is guilty of a good many blunders and perhaps, some very mean things: but the foundation for these hard times was laid before the Democratic party got a smell at the White House. What we most need or should have is less of party and of self and more for the country and the people.

A high protective tariff will not immortalize this country (as some think). Neither will a single gold standard give to the masses of the people prosperity and a healthy growth. We hear men talk of patriotism and love of country; with many of them this is only a farce, and a Pharasee way of expressing their love of country. We read in Holy Writ "if the rightous are scarcely saved where shall the sinner and ungodly appear." Now if the bankers and bondholders, money kings get control of all the wealth of this country what will become of the poor people? They will have for a home the middle of the road, and the heavens for a covering. Prejudice and party affiliation will save no country from existing evils that surround it.

Neither is a gold reserve fund and issuing government bonds in time of peace incentive to the people of this country but it seems our country has become a kind of a pon shop (bond shop). The United States Treasurer and the concience of the people have become articles of merchandise and are for sale (or Sail) to the higest bider.

In these days there is lots of food for the average crank. J. H. M.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 11, 1895.

President Cleveland will make a short stay in Washington, as he is due at the Atlanta Exposition next week. When he returns from Atlanta he will settle down to the winter's work, and he will find plenty of it on hand. In addition to other important work which he must take up, he will have only a little more than a month within which to wright his annual message to Congress, and it will probably be one of the most difficult messages he has ever had to write. The message although addressed to Congress will really be writen to the country, as no body knows any better than the President that nothing short of overwhelming public sentiment will be sufficient to make the republican Congress accept his recommendations as to legislation, however wise they may be.

When a man makes a gigantic ass of himself the best thing he can do is to keep still about it. Some men don't know enough to do this. One of them is Lord Sackville West, who was British Minister to the United States until given his passport, in 1888, by Secretary Bayard, who acted under the instructions of President Cleveland, for having allowed himself to be trapped into wrighting a letter to be used as a republican campaign document. That Sackville should be sore is natural. But in raking up the whole business in a pamplet published for distribution among his friends he has not vindicated himself; he has only confirmed the previously held opinion of him and showed that the years which have passed since his humilitating departure from America have added nothing to his discretion. The dime museum manager who offered him an engagement then would be glad to give him double the money now; and as a freak he would unquestionably draw well.

Hon. Amos Cummings, able newspaper man Tamany democrat and all around good fellow, spent a day in Washington this week. Everybody in Washington will be glad when Amos comes back to Congress, and, judging from what he says, there is little doubt of his coming. This is the way he puts it: "My nomination for Congress to fill the vacancy in one of the New York districts is, of course, a subject of satisfaction to me. I feel complimented, and, further, I feel confident of being elected. There seems to be no doubt of democratic success in the city of New York: Rooseyelt has made sure of that. It now looks as if the democracy would carry the district in which I now run, as well as the city of New York, by a fair majority."

Kentuckians who come to Washington all talk one way about the result of the present campaign. Mr. W. N. Cox, of Louisville, says: "It takes no prophet to tell what the result will be. Hardin will be elected governor by 25,00 majority, and this is a conservative estimate. Senator Blackburn is as good as reelected to succeed himself. He is still making speeches, but he might as well put a stop to his oratory, for enough votes to elect him have already been secured."

Perhaps it is merely a coincidence, but all the same it is worthy of more than a passing notice that the arrival of the new Hawaiian minister, Mr. Castale, in Washington, was very closely followed by a sensational story about the alleged designs which Japan has upon Hawaii, and the fears of the present Hawaiian government that those designs will be realized and the islands be gobbled up by Japan. Last year it was England that was frightening the government of Hawaii. There is just about as much danger from Japan now as there was from England last year. Doubtless either or both countries would be glad to have the islands, but in view of the very positive declaration of Congress, that no foreign interferance with Hawaii be tolerated by the United States, it is not probable that either of them has seriously entertained any designs upon the islands. If, as many believe, these stories are set afloat by those in the employ by the present Hawaiian government for the purpose of influencing public sentiment in this country President Dole and his advisers are being misled.

Secrecary Carlisle left Washington today far Boston, where he will deliver a financial address before the Reform Club Saturday night.

Senator Gorman's charge that the republican candidate for governor of Maryland was named for the position by the B. & O railroad is the political sensation of the week, and it has greatly injured the chances of the republican ticket in Maryland. Mr. Gorman is not the man to make charges unless fortified with the facts to back them up. He knew what he was talking about when he made that charge, or he would not have made it; and the Maryland voters may be trusted to do the rest. The State will remain in the democratic column.

FRESH FROM THE PEN.

Once on a time, an editor,
Who led no life of ease,
Unto a country patron wrote
In words somewhat like these:
"Dear sir, we'll save a space for you,
If you will tell us when
You'll favor us, if speedily,
With something from your pen."

The granger read with some surprise
This singular request;
The little touch of flattery
Urged him to do his best.
And so in quite a liberal mood
He hied him forth and then
Selected from his growing stock,
Two pigs from out the pen.

Well might that worthy editor
Display some mild surprise,
When in the sanctum's quiet depths
This slight should meet his eyes—
A grinning farmer, hat in hand,
(The proudest of all men)
And in the box upon the floor
The products of his pen.

REED AND MERRIAM are mentioned as a possible combination for an attempt of the G. O. P. to carry the country from Maine to Minnesota in '96.

J. ADAM BEDE and wife have returned home to Duluth, having completed their bicycle toure of Europe. There seems to J. Adam to be no place like the "unsalted city by the zinuth sea." And Duluth is a great city.

ANOTHER long list of names of Missouri citizens is being brought up to work on the sympathies of Gov. Clough praying for the pardon of Cole and James Younger. Those Missourians are certainly persistent if nothing else

JERRY ROOT of Fort Ripley is said to have offered to raise a company of soldiers to go to Cuba next month if he can be given encouragement to do so. Others in different parts of the country have made similar offers. Cubans appear to have the sympaties of many Americans, in their fight with Spain.

IN his great speech in favor of the gold standard Ex-Governor Merriman is quoted as saying: "The very life-blood of the great arteries of commerce is in constant danger." Of course; and does the gentleman expect to cure the patient while excluding from the arterial system the white corpuscles. Bleeding patients to death in the hopes of curing them has well nigh gone out of date.

THE Pioneer Press favors trying the curfew ordinance, and says: "if it diminishes the number of juvenile offenders in St. Paul by even a small proportion it is worthy of a test." It is a pretty bad state of affairs when a great metropolitan daily feels itself called upon to make such a statement as that! And to advocate such a remedy! If the police authorities are not able to cope with offenders against the peace and dignity of the city a stronger force might be of service: but it can hardly be expected that the evil disposed will hie themselves off to bed every night simply because the city fathers so order; but they will continue to commit their depredations and will have to be run down by the police just the same as of yore, with the additional trouble to the officer of stopping every time he comes up to a boy or girl to enquire "What business have you out!" It would look better to catch the culprits and not punish the inoffensive.

FRIEND McGARY in his musings intimates that those who advised farmers to diversefy their crops and other farm products was giving poor advice. He should consider the environments. He should think that as Grover Cleveland has said "a condition and not a theory confronts us." We are living in a time when greed and gain have run rampant for a long time. When people have been forced to believe that in order to keep their necks from foreign yokes they must raise the tarriff on every possible article until no one could trade with our nation, that like a poor benighted clam we must live within our own shell. This has been carried to such an extreme that people are now out of luck who have to buy anything, and the farmer who has followed the advice to diversify as much as possible now finds himself supplied with plenty to eat at least and instead of buying his potatoes as last year, he has some to sell or to feed.

In ordinary times when things move along as designed by the Maker without the hindrance of protective tariffs it would be wiser for people perhaps, and better paying for them to raise the one crop for which their land and climate was adopted and rely on others for other necessaries and luxuries. No one expects the miller to run his own blacksmith shop: or the blacksmith to grind his own flour: but each must rely on his neighbor for something. Why then should a farmer be obliged to buy a full set of agricultural tools for raising several kinds of crops some of which his land is poorly adopted to raise. Would it not be more economical for one farmer to have a full equipment of implements for tending one kind of crop, that best addopted to his farm and which will pay him best. It would hardly be expected that a Minnesota man would fit himself out with a full line of machinery for placing on the market, and plant his farm to cotton: nor would a Georgian depend on a wheat crop. It also requires some knowledge of the business But under existing circumstances it seems that Minnesota farmers who use the head as well as the hands and raise a diversity of crops do best.

CALIFORNIA.

HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

Your Long Lake correspondent is once more in California, having left Minnesota, Sept. 4. and arriving at Los Angeles, Cal. on the 12th., and although a chronic invalid he stood the trip quite well. The route travelled was circuitous but for all that it was made on the lines of but two corporations, namely: The Northern Pacific Portland, Oregon, and the Southern Pacific (Shasta Route ect.) from Portland to Los Angeles, and after making three different trips to and from the Mississippi river to the Pacific coast, your correspondent regards the N. P. and Shasta route as being the most interesting and picturesque. The mountain scenery on the latter being varied by frequent and extensive covering of forests of gigantic evergreen timber or coniferious timber, while the more southerly routes also pass through stupendious grotesque mountain scenery, they are accompanied by a destitution of live trees or vegetation, almost a continuous desert: that becomes monotonous and tiresome to the eye, to which may be added the penetrating sand and dust of those arid regions which finds its way into the well fortified Pullman Sleepers and even to eyes, nostrils and teeth of the traveller.

On this trip Mounts Tacoma and Hood were obscured by smoke, dust and clouds, that part of the world having a season of dronth at that time. On passing through the mountains of Northern California a good view of Mount Shasta was obtained. It was truly a grand sight as was the entire mountain district of that region, known as the Shasta Mountains.

The fare (limited tickets) by the N. P. and S. P. Railways to San Francisco, Los Angeles and other points on the Pacific Coast is the same as that of the more southernly routes to the same points. The journey by the N. P. and S. P. occupies a few days but the tourist seems to be compensated for the difference in time by the absence of heat and dust in traveling during the warmer months of the year and by many other interesting features.

On a return after sixteen months absence one finds many improvements in the city of Los Angels and other California towns. Southern Californians insist that they are having a boom whether it can be so designated is hard for the stranger to decide but it may at least be designated as progressiveness.

The wether.—For several days about the midele of September the thermometer ran up to about 90 degrees during the day and somewhat cooler during the night which was followed later by a several days of fine weather neither too warm nor too cold. During the closing week of September thermometer during daytime ran from 90 to 97 degrees dropping to 56 degrees during the night.

The people state that these recent September warm spells were the most umpleasant of the year. October thus has been accompained by the pleasanter weather, ranging from 56 to 70 and 75 daily. There has been no rainfall of any account as yet. The country is dry and dusty. Even the foliage of the trees, is laden with dust. The irrigation process is still in operation at present.

Mc Gary Some More.

MR. EDITOR,—In looking over the situation of things in regard to our country and the political arena I am reminded of a chess board with the game half played and in my imagination this country is nothing more nor less than a raffle box, or a wheel of fortune,

In a good many of the papers we see long articles with headlines something like this "Advice to Farmers." We would say many thanks; small favors thankfully received and large ones in proportion. One fellow says "Do not raise so much grain: go into something else. Another fellow says "Diversify your crops; and if you can't do any better raise cane. This I think we will be compelled to do unless things take a change for the better. The crops have been pretty well diversified this year and the farmers do not seem to get much of a price for anything. If we could grow government bonds on pumpkin vines we might do well. Can anybody tell what's the trouble. If they can we wish they would give us a solution of the problem.

In order to trace the lineal descendants of the Jewish nation it would be proper to go back several thousand years. But in order to trace out where fraud, deception and humbuggery began in this country we only have to turn the calander back about 35 years At the beginning of 61 there was inaugurated in this country a great civil war and a whole nation was up in arms At every cross roads and voting precinct there was a mustering ground. The war came and for four years this country received a baptism of fraternal blood. The results of all wars are demoralizing; and this one being no exception to the rule we found at the close of the war that many men had become hardened, intemprent, dishonest and all had aquired a mania for making money even at the risk of honor and reputation the seed of their element is with us today and from a large emigration from foreign Countrys many of them helped to strengthen this bad element. In a year or two after the war real estate took a boom water edstock of all kinds were put upon the market and the country went wild with speculation everything sold at fabulous prices. Men bought land and city property farmers bought machinery at a high price, gave their notes for almost any amount the dealer would ask. Most of this was done on paper when times were flush and they took no thought of the drop that would come by and by. Now a good many people say all these hard times came through the Democratic party and the present administration. The Democratic party is guilty of a good many blunders and perhaps, some very mean things: but the foundation for these hard times was laid before the Democratic party got a smell at the White House. What we most need or should have is less of party and of self and more for the country and the people.

A high protective tariff will not immortalize this country (as some think). Neither will a single gold standard give to the masses of the people prosperity and a healthy growth. We hear men talk of patriotism and love of country; with many of them this is only a farce, and a Pharasee way of expressing their love of country. We read in Holy Writ "if the rightous are scarcely saved where shall the sinner and ungodly appear." Now if the bankers and bondholders, money kings get control of all the wealth of this country what will become of the poor people' They will have for a home the middle of the road, and the heavens for a covering. Prejudice and party affiliation will save no country from existing evils that suround it.

Neither is a gold reserve fund and issuing government bonds in time of peace incentive to the people of this country but it seems our country has become a kind of a pon shop (bond shop). The United States Treasurer and the concience of the people have become articles of merchandise and are for sale (or Sail) to the higest bider.

In these days there is lots of food for the average crank. J. H. M.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 11, 1895.

President Cleveland will make a short stay in Washington, as he is due at the Atlanta Exposition next week. When he returns from Atlanta he will settle down to the winter's work, and he will find plenty of it on hand. In addition to other important work which he must take up, he will have only a little more than a month within which to wright his annual message to Congress, and it will probably be one of the most difficult messages he has ever had to write. The message although addressed to Congress will really be writen to the country, as nobody knows any better than the President that nothing short of overwhelming public sentiment will be sufficient to make the republican Congress accept his recommendations as to legislation, however wise they may be.

When a man makes a gigantic ass of himself the best thing he can do is to keep still about it. Some men don't know enough to do this. One of them is Lord Sackville West, who was British Minister to the United States until given his passport, in 1888, by Secretary Bayard, who acted under the instructions of President Cleveland, for having allowed himself to be trapped into wrighting a letter to be used as a republican campaign document. That Sackville should be sore is natural. But in raking up the whole business in a pamplet published for distribution among his friends he has not vindicated himself; he has only confirmed the previously held opinion of him and showed that the years which have passed since his humilitating departure from America have added nothing to his discretion. The dime museum manager who offered him an engagement then would be glad to give him double the money now; and as a freak he would unquestionably draw well.

Hon. Amos Cummings, able newspaper man Tamany democrat and all around good fellow, spent a day in Washington this week. Everybody in Washington will be glad when Amos comes back to Congress, and, judging from what he says, there is little doubt of his coming. This is the way he puts it: "My nomination for Congress to fill the vacancy in one of the New York districts is, of course, a subject of satisfaction to me. I feel complimented, and, further, I feel confident of being elected. There seems to be no doubt of democratic success in the city of New York: Rooseyelt has made sure of that. It now looks as if the democracy would carry the district in which I now run, as well as the city of New York, by a fair majority."

Kentuckians who come to Washington all talk one way about the result of the present campaign. Mr. W. N. Cox, of Louisville, says: "It takes no prophet to tell what the result will be. Hardin will be elected governor by 25,00 majority, and this is a conservative estimate. Senator Blackburn is as good as reelected to succeed himself. He is still making speeches, but he might as well put a stop to his oratory, for enough votes to elect him have already been secured."

Perhaps it is merely a coincidence, but all the same it is worthy of more than a passing notice that the arrival of the new Hawaiian minister, Mr. Castale, in Washington, was very closely followed by a sensational story about the alleged designs which Japan has upon Hawaii, and the fears of the present Hawaiian government that those designs will be realized and the islands be gobbled up by Japan. Last year it was England that was frightening the government of Hawaii. There is just about as much danger from Japan now as there was from England last year. Doubtless either or both countries would be glad to have the islands, but in view of the very positive declaration of Congress, that no foreign interferance with Hawaii be tolerated by the United States, it is not probable that either of them has seriously entertained any designs upon the islands. If, as many believe, these stories are set afloat by those in the employ by the present Hawaiian government for the purpose of influencing public sentiment in this country President Dole and his advisers are being misled.

Secrecary Carlisle left Washington today far Boston, where he will deliver a financial address before the Reform Club Saturday night.

Senator Gorman's charge that the republican candidate for governor of Maryland was named for the position by the B. & O railroad is the political sensation of the week, and it has greatly injured the chances of the republican ticket in Maryland. Mr. Gorman is not the man to make charges unless fortified with the facts to back them up. He knew what he was talking about when he made that charge, or he would not have made it; and the Maryland voters may be trusted to do the rest. The State will remain in the democratic column.

MARTIN BALLWEBER, arrested the other day in Pittsburgh, said that he had been a tramp forty-four years. He is 78 years old.

THE crocodile will sometimes go without food for a year. Upon waking up from a fast of this duration he is something to be avoided.

A FASHION note states that the latest umbrella looks just like a cane. It will be just as easy to borrow as the old kind, and less cumbersome.

THERE are twenty-one persons in Monterey county, Cal., who own more than 9,000 acres of land each. There are several estates of 30,000 and 40,000 acres in that county.

A LOUISVILLE man has applied for a divorce, alleging that he thought his wife 15 years of age when she was 40. The wife should now apply for a commission to inquire into her husband's sanity.

A YOUNG Ohio dressmaker upon reading of presents given a young lady remarked that she would like a pair of bicycle bloomers. Twenty of her young lady friends called soon after, each presenting her with a pair of bloomers.

THE refusal of the women of Massachusetts to improve a recent opportunity to vote is explained by Miss Susan B. Anthony on the ground that a poll tax of fifty cents is imposed. Possibly, after seeing some of the men who voted, the ladies concluded the privilege was not worth half a dollar.

CHINESE rainmakers, we read, dress a dog in a comic costume and carry him through the streets. This makes the people laugh, and the gods while in this happy frame of mind let the rains fall down. There is quite as much sense in this Chinese custom as there is in the rainmakers of this more intelligent country.

THE Vanderbilts gave the duke of Marlborough $15,000,000 for marrying their daughter. Of this amount $5,000,000 will be put into Blenheim, the ducal home on which another American, the wife of the present duke's father, put $3,000,000. America has not an aristocracy of its own, but it is supporting that of England with great liberality.

AN Alabama girl has brought suit against a railway company for $10,000 damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of her being forcibly kissed by a train conductor. In case the company loses the suit every railway corporation in the country will feel moved to equip its conductors and other agents with automatic air-brakes for their oculators.

THE newest woman will have the puff in her sleeves in the region of the elbow, an odd enough effect after the broad-shouldered affairs of the past season. Thin shoulders and big elbows make an odd combination and one not at all flattering to many women. But style is style and must be followed, as the dog follows his master. A man may have some individuality in his dress, but the woman must follow the ever changing styles, and not very far behind either.

APPLES, 4 cents per bushel; watermelons, two for a nickel; cantelopes, six for 5 cents; Irish potatoes, unsalable at 25 cents per bushel; vegetables, given away by the wagon load—no sale for them; butter, 10 cents per pound; corn, 75 cents per barrel; fruits of all sorts dropping into the hands of passers-by; spring chickens trooping around the yard by the hundreds. If this isn't a land of peace and plenty, says a Kentucky paper, it's because some fool carries a pistol or some other fool won't work.

SELDOM do those engaged in the work of marrying indulge in a pun during the ceremony, however much they may be tempted by the names of the happy couple, but a Salt Lake justice of the peace could not lose an opportunity afforded him. In a couple presenting themselves the name of the bridegroom was John Pill. When the justice reached that part of the ceremony where the bride agrees to take the groom for better or worse, instead of the usual formula, he said: "Clara, do you take this Pill?" to which the bride was heard to respond: "Yes," almost inaudibly.

"YOU can't believe anything you see in the newspapers," sadly remarked Brocky Bill, a Buffalo man. "Here I used to read of the rich purses snatched from ladies in dry goods stores and crowds. So I left my own quiet, but renumerative, trade of planting gold bricks and became a moll-buzzer, as the detectives call us. What is the result? I have snatched upward of 200 pocketbooks from women, and I have accumulated 13 cents in coppers, 287 receipts for making chocolate cake, several gross of bent hair pins, 2,244 samples of dress goods. The press is utterly unreliable nowadays."

AN English physician calls attention to a means of keeping pneumonia, colds and all ailments that cold weather brings on at a distance. Deep and forced respirations, he says, will keep the entire body in a glow in the coldest weather, no matter how thinly one may be clad. He was himself half frozen to death one night, and began taking deep breaths and keeping the air in his lungs as long as possible. The result was that he was comfortable in a few minutes. The deep respiration, he says, stimulate the blood current and cause the system to become pervaded with the generated heat.

Miners Perish Near Story City, Ia.

WEBSTER CITY, Ia, Oct. 15.—Four men were suffocated by gas and smoke in a coal mine 2½ miles from Story City Saturday night at 6 o'clock. The dead are: Albert Peterson, Alexander Eastman, Ine Ingeson and George Payne.

The men were in the mine just at closing time. The engineer had built a big fire in the furnace which hoists the cage and left for his supper. While he was gone the timber adjacent to the furnace caught fire, and the flames reached the cable attached to the cage. When the engineer returned he attempted to hoist the cage with the men, but the cable broke and they fell to the bottom of the shaft. The fall was not over 3 feet and they were uninjured. The mine was filling with smoke from the burning wood, and there was no other mode of egress for them.

OLNEY'S NOTICE TO SPAIN.

Depriving Williams of Diplomatic Powers Violates Our Treaty.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—A special to the World from Washington says the recent excited dispatches from Madrid are explained by facts revealed in Washington. What this government has done has been to formally notify the Spanish government that action recently taken by it in Havana is in violation of the treaty rights of this country, and that for any damage to American citizens or American dignity arising therefrom Spain will be held responsible. The circumstances are as follows:

Since Consul General Williams compelled Capt. Gen. Calleja, while governor general of Cuba, to recognize the treaty of 1877 in the case of Julio Sanquilly, and by so doing prevented the trial of the latter by a military court in Havana last February, the Spanish government has been restive over the question of Mr. Williams' diplomatic authority. Senor Canovas, the Spanish prime minister, after the subject was fully considered at a meeting of the Spanish ministry at which he presided, decided to deprive Mr. Williams of all diplomatic authority and confine him strictly to the purely commercial or consular privileges of his office. Accordingly the Spanish minister of the colonies instructed Gen. Campos to inform Mr. Williams that henceforth he would not be recognized as possessing any authority to transact business with the governor general of Cuba upon other than commercial matters. Gen. Campos sent for Mr. Williams recently and communicated to him the instruction from Spain.

Secretary Olney straightway prepared a state paper in which he disagreed entirely with the conclusion of the Spanish minister. The action of the latter was based on the consular treaty existing between Spain and the United States. From this treaty, signed in 1879, consular officers did not receive authority to cover any diplomatic questions. The treaty with Spain, however, specifies that United States consular officers shall have all the rights and privileges of "the most favored nation." This affords the basis for Secretary Olney's demand. The German government has a consular treaty with Spain in which consuls and consul generals may act as diplomats if circumstances demand.

STORY WRITER DEAD.

Clara Doty Bates Passes Away at Chicago After a Severe Illness.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—Clara Doty Bates, the well-known authoress and writer of children's stories, died Monday morning at the Newberry flats. She had been given up by the attending physician several days ago.

[Mrs. Bates was born in Ann Arbor, Mich., December 22, 1833, and was the daughter of Samuel Rosecrans Doty, a cousin of Gen. Rosecrans, who traced back his ancestry through Ethan Allen to the first Doty of the Mayflower. On her mother's side she was descended from the Lawrence family of Virginia, and she inherited the sturdy moral fiber of the Puritan with the graces of person of the cavalier. She was married in 1869 to Morgan Bates, a well-known trade paper publisher, and since 1877 they have made their home in Chicago.

Mrs. Bates was always a close student of the best literature and a continuous though not a voluminous writer of poetry and of stories and sketches, chiefly for the young. Her first verses were published before she was 8 years old, and since then she had written constantly for the best publishers. It is said of her that since the death of Louisa M. Alcott she had a wider circle of friends and admirers among the young and among mothers who have grown up to rear their children on the stories of hers that they read themselves in childhood than any other woman in America.]

The Turkish Version.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 16.—The government has issued an account of the recent rioting at Trebizonde. It traces the origin of the trouble to the two Armenians who fired at and wounded the ex-Vali of Va and the commandant of the Turkish troops. Two days later an Armenian wounded a soldier on the street and the disorders then began, but were suppressed. Four days afterwards a number of Armenians attacked a group of Mussulmans, and fired on the police who intervened to protect the Mussulmans. Then followed the rioting, during which forty Mussulmans and 200 Armenians were killed.

Break on the Silver Question.

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 16.—Soon after the Farmers' National congress, which met here last week and has been holding daily sessions since, resumed its sitting Monday morning a sensation was sprung in the form of a fight on free silver, which resulted in the complete defeat of the 16 to 1 forces. By a vote of 251 9-14 to 104 5-14 the congress refused to insert the words "at a ratio not to exceed 16 to 1" in a resolution asking congress to use both gold and silver on a parity, and calling for an international conference on the monetary question.

Resigns His Office.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 15.—The finance committee of Pittsburgh councils met at 10:30 o'clock Monday morning to hear the report of the sub-committee concerning the investigation of the city attorney's office. ## AN ODD NEGRO COLONY.

Thirty Bachelors Who Dwell in an Old-Time Pennsylvania Town.

No one passing along Germantown avenue where it crosses Broad street, can fail to observe the dilapidated old building which stands some distance back from the street on the southwest corner of Broad street and Germantown avenue. The house presents a striking appearance on account of its pretentiousness. It is built of stone, three stories in height, with a wide-spreading porch extending in full length of the building and carried around the side.

The mansion was built between seventy-five and a hundred years ago for inn purposes. From the time of its erection and for forty or fifty years afterward it was the only hostelry between the city proper and Germantown, and, consequently, a very popular road house. Its convenience to Broad street made it one of the greatest resorts in old times for sleighing parties from the city, who would drive out there on cold winter evenings for a good supper and something hot and strong to quench the thirst and warm the inner man.

Several years ago the property was purchased by F. G. Palmer and George A Rice for $105,000. It was given out at the time that Messrs. Palmer and Rice intended to construct a large manufactory on the property, but up to the present date this has not been done, and the house is now occupied by about thirty young colored men, who have formed a kind of community among themselves in the old building.

These men rent their rooms separately from the owners of the property. Some club together to pay this rent, three or four living in one room, while others who are more prosperous occupy and pay for a room for themselves. The men are all employed in various occupations in the vicinity of the building where they reside, and the majority of them earn good wages. If one man happens to get out of work, if popular with the rest, he is usually assisted by the crowd to pay his board until he can secure work again, when he is expected to reimburse those who have helped him.

As a rule the cooking of the crowd is done by one man, who is delegated by lot or some such arrangement to cook for the household for a week. The men all buy their own food, which is prepared for them to their liking. Among the appointments of the house is a chapel, where service is held every Sunday, a colored preacher being brought out from the city for the purpose. There is a barber-shop also in the house and an oyster saloon, where the men, when particularly flush, can regale themselves on a stew made of the choicest bivalves.

Dining-Room Belongings.

While we do not expect easy chairs or anything approaching them in character at table, pains should be taken to have chairs which are comfortable. There is no excuse for many of the patterns of dining-room chairs save the desire to make something so stiff and awkward that it could never by any possibility be spirited away to any other portion of the domicile. Then there should be a thick, warm carpet in winter, to deaden the sounds of movement, and to relieve that sense of bareness which always accompanies uncovered floors. Most emphatically, the dining-room is not a place for rugs. As there should be no necessity for the waiters to open even a swinging door, the passage through which service is rendered should not be closed; but it should be cut off by a screen, behind which the waiter will disappear, and from the mysterious receptacle in the rear of which he will again emerge, laden with those things which are to make the palate and the heart glad. Above all things, the dining-room should be well ventilated before and after meals, so that it may at all times be fresh and sweet, free from the odor of food, which soon becomes stale and very disagreeable.—Good Housekeeping.

His Worry.

"Did you sleep well last night, Mr. Pykins?" said that gentleman's landlady.

"No. I sat up all night."

"Are you worried about anything?" she went on, with a solicitude that was really motherly.

"Yes—to tell the truth, I am. If you don't mind, I'll confide in you."

"What is it?"

"You see that blanket you gave me is a little short--"

"Y-yes."

"And I sat up in my chair nearly all the night trying to make up my mind whether I would rather have chilblains or pneumonia."—Washington Star.

Advice to Travelers.

In an article on the life and duties of railroad trainmen, published lately in a leading magazine, we noted this: "It is astonishing what a number of people of education and intelligence (unless they have traveled a great deal) leave all their common-sense at home whenever they take a railroad journey." In our own experience we have seen the patience of conductors most sorely tried by people whose one idea seemed to be that the utmost vigilance was necessary against being imposed on by railroad men. For the information of our readers we give a few extracts from "suggestions to passengers" issued by one of the great eastern railroads, remarking that the same apply to almost all roads.

"Passengers, upon buying through tickets, should make a memorandum of the 'Destination'—'By what R. R. issued'—'Form Number' — 'Consecutive Number' — and 'Date.' They should make a memorandum also of the 'Number' and 'Destination' of their baggage checks. This will aid in the recovery of tickets or checks if lost or stolen.

"Personal baggage, when not exceeding 150 pounds in weight, will be checked to and from all stations upon presentation of one full passage ticket; 75 pounds on half ticket.

"Local or coupon tickets not used or only a portion of such tickets having been used, when of any value, will be redeemed through the General Passenger and Ticket Office, in accordance with established rules.

"Passengers purchasing tickets or mileage books which for any reason they do not use in their entirety, should not attempt to dispose of them to unauthorized dealers, as this company will fully protect original purchasers from loss in cases where for satisfactory reasons the tickets are not used, giving the full value of the unused portion of such tickets on a proper basis.

"In event of any disagreement with the conductor relative to tickets required, privileges allowed, etc., passengers should pay conductor's claim, take his receipt, and refer case for adjustment to the General Passenger and Ticket Agent, who will promptly refund any overcharge."

Compliance with the above suggestions, and the purchase of your ticket reading "via Burlington Route," when going to Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha or Denver, will be certain to insure a comfortable journey. If your home agent cannot fix you with a ticket via the Burlington, then write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., who will promptly inform you as to the rate of fare, and send you time-tables, etc.

THE WITCH WIFE'S CHARMS.

As I came down the budding lane,
The birds a-singing free,
There came along an old witch wife,
And shrilly called to me.

"Oh, buy a charm, young maid!" she said,
"Oh, buy a charm of me,
To chain thy sweetheart to thy side
Though he is on the sea."

"I will not do it, dame," I said,
"If false at heart he be,
I'd rather have a charm to keep
His face afar from me!"

"Oh, buy a charm, young maid!" she said,
"Oh, buy a charm of me,
To break the curse of foes of thine
Who might work ill to thee."

"I will not do it, dame," I said,
"If foul of heart they be,
A deeper curse is laid on them
Than aught they lay on me."

"Oh, buy a charm, young maid!" she said,
"A potent charm of me,
To bind the strong heart of thy friend
In love and loyalty."

"I will not do it, dame!" I laughed,
"The charm could never be
Could make or break the chain that binds
My friend's strong heart to me!"

—Margaret Gilman George, in Youth's Companion.

BEN'S BID.

"Why don't you raise chickens for the market?" suggested Hiram Bassett, the village storekeeper, to Ben Singer. Ben was fourteen years old. His mother had died a short time before. His father was a carpenter by trade, but had been crippled by rheumatism so that he could not work. Ben, who always looked on Mr. Bassett as a friend of undoubted fidelity and great resources, had been telling the storekeeper how much he wished he could get some steady work. Mr. Singer's little stock of money was exhausted; he had already sold some of his tools to get the food he and his son needed. Ben realized that the day was rapidly coming when there would be no way of getting more, unless he managed to do something of greater profit than the odd jobs he picked up now and then from the surrounding farmers.

"I'll do it," said Ben, in response to Mr. Bassett's suggestion, and, turning about, trudged home, and all the way was planning how he might begin.

A week later the "chicken farm," as Ben called it, was a fact; at least he had made a start. In his spare time he had constructed some coops from old barrels and a box or two. The pay for two days' work he invested in three dozen eggs, and with the money obtained by sorting some vegetables for the storekeeper bought two hens which were just about to "set." He and his father already had five pullets, and within a couple of weeks more there were five "clutches" of eggs under as many of his hens.

He fed his chickens from the screenings he got at a small price from several of the farmers. The hens managed, too, to pick up a good deal of food among the bushes and in the tiny garden back of the house. Ben worked hard at the small jobs he was given round about, and waited with confidence for the time when he should be able to make something from his venture.

He would have felt much happier if it hadn't been for his father's condition. Mr. Singer did not complain of the rheumatism, though it still kept him confined to his big chair. But something worried him very much; the boy could see that. He asked what it was several times, but Mr. Singer's only reply was that he suffered, he felt downhearted on account of being so crippled. He tried to make Ben think that that was all that distressed him, but the boy could not believe it.

Slowly the flock of chickens grew. The eggs hatched remarkably well. Fifty downy little balls were soon running in and out of the coops where their mothers were confined. Four more "clutches" of eggs were under that number of new hens, which he had bought and paid for in installments of work. The first days of summer saw him with seventy-five young chickens, some of them able to scratch for themselves. It took all he could now make to keep his father and himself in food and to provide for his farm, but he was always on the alert for a job, and was as cheerful as he could be, so that the neighbors all liked to employ him when they could. Ben had told his father of his plan, and explained that as few of the farmers raised chickens, except for their own use, he thought there ought to be a chance to make something by shipping them to Waynesboro, the bigger town, five miles away. Mr. Singer was not altogether confident of the success of such an experiment, but he said nothing to discourage the boy, and used to sit near the windows and watch the broods and talk to Ben about them. July and August went by, and the young chickens thrived. Only a few of them were lost. A prowling 'possum got several before Ben trapped the marauder. Cold and rain killed off a few more. But the first of September came and more than sixty chickens were the boy's.

Ben planned to sell thirty or forty in the early autumn and to keep the remainder till the next summer to stock his farm with afresh. He intended to go into it then on a bigger scale, and he hoped to realize enough from his sales to keep him through the winter with the part of his flock he retained.

Then, one day in September, as he and his father sat in the doorway of the cottage, Ben noticed a couple of tears trickle down his father's face. He jumped up and threw his arms around his father's neck. He was frightened and he did not understand just what was the matter.

Presently Mr. Singer unclasped the boy's hands and looked him in the face. "Ben," he said, "I'm afraid we are in for hard times yet."

"What do you mean, Dad?" asked Ben.

"The house is only rented," said Mr. Singer slowly; "they can't take that, but they can take all our furniture and everything else."

"Why, they belong to us," exclaimed Ben.

"So they do, Ben, but the law gives another man the right to sell them and take the money they bring if we owe him money and can't pay it."

"And we owe somebody money? I thought Dr. James was paid?"

"So he was. But there is some one else to whom I owe money—a man I borrowed from when your mother was sick. I owe him one hundred dollars. He has what they call my note. I haven't been able to pay him, and now he says he must have it. He is entitled to it right off, and will get as much of it as possible by selling what we have. He was here to see me about it the other day, and I tried to get him to wait. But he says he's tired of waiting and the sheriff'll come and sell us out."

Ben had a fairly good idea now of the situation. He tried to comfort his father, but it was of little avail. Mr. Singer felt his helplessness and the disgrace keenly, and did not know what would become of them. Ben worried over what he had heard all night long, but he could find no way out of their difficulty.

The next day he took ten of his biggest chickens to the village store. He had already arranged with Mr. Bassett to have them sent to a commission merchant at Waynesboro and sold. After he had delivered the chickens and Mr. Bassett had promised to get him the money for them as quickly as possible, the idea struck the boy of asking the storekeeper about a sheriff's sale. The thing puzzled him a bit yet, and he indulged a faint hope that, if he knew just how it was done, he might be able to hit on a way out of it. "Mr. Bassett," he said, "how does a sheriff sell you out?"

Perhaps the storekeeper had an idea of the trouble. But if he did, he gave no sign of it, and tried to explain to Ben how such a sale was conducted. "And the people at the sale," he concluded, "offer to buy what is offered, and the sheriff sells to the one who makes the highest bid."

Ben asked several questions before he left. Then he walked slowly home, and all the while, in his mind, he was turning over a dimly defined project which had been suggested to him by what he had heard.

A week later Ben received the money for his chickens—three dollars and eighty cents. He was a proud boy, and he would have shown his satisfaction more if it had not been for the impending trouble, which made his father so miserable that he could not leave his bed. Ben bought some fruit for twenty-five cents, and took it home to him, but Mr. Singer was feeling so bad that he ate of it only sparingly.

On a Monday in the early part of the next month the sheriff, in pursuance of formal notice, arrived at the house to make a sale to satisfy Mr. Singer's creditor. Quite a crowd had gathered about the cottage, and there was not one present who did not sympathize with the carpenter and his son. Ben's father was very ill that morning and could not leave the bed. The sheriff mounted a box in the yard and began a description of the goods to be sold.

It was a pitiful array, after all. A few tools, a miscellaneous assortment of cheap furniture, a kitchen stove with some cooking utensils and china, and some linen and blankets. But one item in the lot—the chickens—the sheriff counted on as his drawing card. Half a hundred of fine hens and marketable chickens were cooped in a nearby pen, and upon the value of these the county officer dwelt at length. Then, when he thought he had the crowd sufficiently around, he named a starting figure in default of an actual bid.

"Sixty dollars for this choice lot of chickens and household goods," he cried.

There was no response. He repeated the announcement, then dropped the figures to fifty dollars. Still no one spoke.

The sheriff made some further remarks about the articles for sale and tried again at forty dollars. But the crowd was dumb. No one felt inclined to buy out the crippled carpenter and his son.

The sheriff tried again and again, dropping the figures lower and lower, and all the time growing more vociferous in the explanation of the bargain which was offered. He did not specially like the job, for he had been told about the case by some of the village people, but he had a duty to perform, and he knew he must get as much out of the sale as he could.

The figures had dropped to ten dollars, but silence reigned, except for a defiant crow from one of the roosters in the pen. Mr. Singer's creditor, evidently, had no representative on the ground, and even the low price named was not taken up with.

The sheriff dropped his offer now, a dollar at a time, but, apparently, in vain. It looked as if the sale would come to nothing.

Nine! Eight! Seven! Six! Five! Four! Not a response came from those about.

"Three dollars!" The sheriff was smiling at the ridiculous offer, and was just about to name two dollars and one dollar in quick succession, hoping for no reply, when a boyish voice, close at hand, answered:

"I bid three dollars!"

The officer looked down on the speaker and saw Ben. The boy held up three one-dollar notes in his hand.

The sheriff smiled. More than one man in the crowd felt like cheering the bidder. But the officer knew he could not accept the offer at once.

"Three dollars I am bid!" he answered. "Who bids four?"

No one spoke.

"Three dollars and a-half, then?" he said.

Every one was silent, and the suggestion of three dollars and a-quarter, likewise, went unanswered. Three dollars was the one bid offered, and, after one expostulation, the sheriff took the offer.

Ben handed the money to the sheriff, who congratulated him on his purchase with an earnestness he had seldom felt on occasions of this kind, and there was not one of the farmers who did not come forward and speak a kindly word of praise and encouragement to the boy.

But Ben was listening to little of all of this; he slipped away to his father, who could only strain the boy to him while the tears streamed down his face.

The chicken farm was saved, and the chicken farm proved a success. A year later, when Mr. Singer was once more working steadily, and his rheumatism was gone, his creditor was paid in full the amount borrowed from him, and the proceeds from Ben's chicken farm did not a little to make up the sum required.—Chicago Inter Ocean.
